PPP slams threats hurled by Tarar

F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: Slamming PML-N candidate from a Lahore constituency Ataulh Khan Tarar for hurling threats at her party's voters, PPP Senator Palwasha Khan on Monday asked the PML-N to make its stance clear on its leader's aggressive language.

Addressing a press conference in Islamabad, she appealed to the Election Commission of Pakistan (ECP) to take notice of the PML-N leader's language. She said the reason why Tarar had resorted to such tactics was because he knew fully well that he would taste defeat in the elections. She claimed that the PML-N had the habit of purchasing votes. "Do you think that you can browbeat the PPP by hurling threats?" Palwasha asked the PML-N candidate. It appeared, she went on to say, as if Tarar had watched an Indian movie. "The language he is using is not expected from a civilized man," she added. The PPP senator said that Tarar should be mindful of the fact that the people hold the PML-N accountable in the elections. She asked Tarar how on earth he asked PPP Chairman Bilawal Bhutto Zardari to leave Lahore. "Let me remind you that even in the past, the PPP faced political heavyweights in Lahore."

Palwasha claimed that even the PML-N voters were not happy with the party's decision to award ticket to Tarar for the elections. "The bloodbath committed by the PML-N government in Model Town in 2014 is not hidden from anyone," the PPP senator said.

India a terrorist state, says PM

F.P. Report

MUZAFFARABAD: Caretaker Prime Minister Anwaar-ul-Haq Kakar on Monday said that India was a terrorist state, which had been committing the worst atrocities and brutalities against the innocent people of Indian Illegally Occupied Jammu & Kashmir for decades.

The world was, however, silently watching the Indian state terrorism against the Kashmiris, he regretted while addressing the Azad Jammu and Kashmir Legislative Assembly on the occasion of Kashmir Solidarity Day. The prime minister said for last many years, India was presenting a false narrative and trying to weaken the indigenous movement of the Kashmiris for freedom by wrongly labeling them as terrorists.

There was a clear difference between terrorism and the people's struggle for independence, he added. PM Kakar said that the Indian leadership was also claiming that Gilgit-Baltistan and Azad Jammu & Kashmir were part of their country. "On this day, I make it clear that India should not have any such illusions. We believe in peace and are showing maximum patience and tolerance, but any misadventure in this regard will be forcefully responded."

He reaffirmed that Pakistan did not want any conflict in the region, however, it was fully capable of strongly retaliating any attack on its soil. India, he said, had for many times tested Pakistan's capacity, and if still had any desire in that regard then "we are fully ready to show our might".

He said if India was a true democracy then it should give the people of Kashmir their just right to self-determination, besides restoring all the basic human rights in the IIOJK. PM Kakar said India must also stop the gross violations of human rights in the region along with releasing all the political prisoners. It should also abrogate all the strict emergency laws, besides removing its heavy military presence from the villages and towns of Kashmir. It should allow the Kashmiris to hold peaceful gatherings, he added.

The prime minister said that India must allow unrestricted access to the observers of UN and Organization of Islamic Conference (OIC), international media and human rights organizations to IIOJK to get first-hand information about the situation there; and investigate and report human rights violations. He said that India's illegal and unilateral actions of August 5, 2019 usurping the special status of the IIOJK were a blatant violation of international laws, including the UN Charter, 4th Geneva Convention and the relevant UN Security Council resolutions.

India had since been engaged in taking further measures to alter the demographic structure and political landscape of the held Valley, he added. PM Kakar said that the 'Kashmir Solidarity Day' was annually observed on the 5th February across Pakistan to express its unwavering support for the Kashmiris' just struggle for realization of their right to self-determination.

It was also an occasion to pay rich tribute to the sacrifices rendered by the Kashmiri brothers and sisters during the last 76 years, he added. The prime minister said that Pakistan had consistently maintained that a lasting solution of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute was possible only in accordance with the relevant UN Security Council resolutions and as per the wishes of Kashmiri people.

Pakistan would continue its moral, diplomatic and political support for the just cause, he vowed. PM Kakar said that the relevant UN Security Council resolutions provided that the final disposition of the Jammu and Kashmir dispute would be made in accordance with the will of its people through the democratic method of a free and impartial plebiscite conducted under the auspices of the United Nations.

However, he added, India over the last 76 years had carried out a relentless campaign to intimidate and suppress the IIOJK people as evident from extrajudicial killings, arbitrary detentions and custodial torture. Earlier on his arrival at arrival at the AJK Legislative Assembly, the prime minister was presented a guard of honour.

Last day for candidates to campaign today

F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: Today, February 6, marks the final curtain call for candidates across Pakistan as the 2024 election campaign officially concludes at midnight.

With the clock ticking down, candidates are making last-ditch efforts to sway voters across the country in their favour.

The Election Commission of Pakistan (ECP) has declared the period following February 6 and 7 as a pre-poll silence period, strictly prohibiting campaigning activities like rallies, public meetings, and media appearances. This silent period is intended to provide voters with a space for reflection before they cast their ballots on February 8. Despite the approaching deadline, the political temperature remains high across the country. Candidates are expected to utilize the remaining hours to hold final rallies, address public gatherings, and engage in door-to-door campaigning. Social media is also buzzing with intense online campaigns as parties and candidates make their final appeals.

However, after the clock strikes midnight tonight, the hustings will fall silent. Any candidate found flouting the ECP's guidelines and engaging in campaigning activities during the pre-poll silence period will face strict action, including potential disqualification.

With the campaign period drawing to a close, attention now shifts to the crucial polling day. Over 128 million registered voters across Pakistan will have the opportunity to exercise their franchise and select their representatives for the 16th National Assembly and various provincial assemblies. The pre-poll silence period serves as a reminder of the importance of a calm and reflective atmosphere before the elections. Russian authorities cast doubt on antiwar hopeful's election bid

MOSCOW: The Central Election Commission (CEC) of Russia has found flaws in documents backing Boris Nadezhdin's bid to run in next month's presidential vote, he has said. The CEC informed the aspiring antiwar candidate on Monday that it had found 15 percent of the signatures he submitted to access the electoral race to be invalid, Nadezhdin said. The commission could now block his bid to enter the election.

The municipal councillor, a prominent critic of President Vladimir Putin, has caught the attention of Russia's small opposition forces with promises to end the war in Ukraine. He has virtually no chance of unseating Putin, but it is thought that authorities would not welcome a candidate who would introduce antiwar rhetoric in the race for the March 15 election. Nadezhdin, running on the ticket of the small centre-right Civic Initiative party, last week submitted the 100,000 signatures required to register. However, the CEC does not tolerate more than a 5 percent error. "The CEC working group reported 15 percent of defects in the signatures that I have submitted on January 31," Nadezhdin said on his Telegram channel. Such a level of invalid signatures would provide grounds for the CEC to disqualify him from running. "If the Central Electoral Commission refuses to register me I will appeal the decision to the Supreme Court," Nadezhdin said. The CEC's final ruling on the matter is expected on Wednesday, a spokesperson for Nadezhdin said. Putin will be running as an independent, rather than as the candidate of the governing United Russia party, meaning he needs 300,000 signatures to support his candidacy. He has already collected more than 3.5 million, according to his supporters. It is thought virtually certain that Putin will win re-election to extend his rule over Russia for at least another six years. Officials had already expressed doubt over the validity of 60-year-old Nadezhdin's bid. "When we see dozens of people who are no longer on this earth and they add a signature, that poses questions about the ethical standards being used ... including by the person collecting them," Nikolay Bulayev, CEC's deputy chairman, said. Nadezhdin denied the accusations, posting photographs on Telegram of people queuing to submit signatures. Nobody expects Nadezhdin to win even if he is allowed to participate, given Putin's long dominance and control of the state. The Kremlin chief is almost certain to win his fifth term as president, extending his 24-year leadership of Russia, including eight years as prime minister. But Nadezhdin's campaign has captured people's attention because of his strong opposition to what the Kremlin calls its "special military operation" in Ukraine. He says Putin made a "fatal mistake" by launching the conflict and has pledged to end it via negotiation. Nadezhdin - born in Soviet-ruled Uzbekistan to a Jewish mother who was a music teacher and a physicist father - has spent the last 30 years in Russian politics, working as a councillor in the town of Dolgoprudny outside Moscow. His bid raises the question of just how far the Kremlin would let him go at a time when speaking out against the conflict is politically fraught, often landing critics in prison. Putin has not allowed real electoral opposition in his 24-year rule, with rivals such as opposition leader Alexey Navalny behind bars. Navalny's wife Yuliya signed her name in support of Nadezhdin in a symbolic photo posted by the jailed critic's ally. — Aljazeera

Dozens detained as Russian troops' wives call for their return from Kyiv

KYIV (AP): More than two dozen people, mostly journalists, were detained at a protest in central Moscow, as wives and other relatives of Russian servicemen mobilized to fight in Ukraine called for their return, according to independent Russian news reports. The relatives gathered to lay flowers at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, just outside the Kremlin walls. They marked 500 days since Russian President Vladimir Putin in September 2022 ordered a "partial mobilization" of up to 300,000 reservists following battlefield setbacks in Moscow's full-scale war against Ukraine. The call-up was widely unpopular and prompted hundreds of thousands to flee abroad to avoid being drafted. Wives and relatives of some of the reservists called up in 2022 have campaigned for them to be discharged and replaced with contract soldiers. Demonstration was organized by one such campaign group, The Way Home, that posted on Telegram calling on "wives, mothers, sisters and children" of reservists from across Russia to come to Moscow to "demonstrate their unity." "We want our husbands back alive," one of the protesters, who only gave her name as Antonina for fear of reprisals, is heard saying in a video published by independent Russian news outlet SOTAvision. Antonina insisted she does not want compensation from the Russian government if her husband is killed, and said she would instead "either go to a convent or follow him." "I don't want to live alone! And if (Russian authorities) don't understand this ... I don't know. God be their judge," she told a SOTAvision reporter, struggling to hold back tears. Demonstration was the ninth and largest of similar weekly gatherings organized by The Way Home. One popular Russian Telegram news channel estimated that some 200 people turned out. Allies of jailed Kremlin foe Alexei Navalny and Russian opposition politician Maksim Kats voiced support for the protest, while the Moscow prosecutor's office early warned Russians not to participate in "unauthorized mass events." According to OVD-Info, an independent website that monitors political arrests in Russia, police detained 27 people during the protest, mostly journalists. According to Sota, most were later released, although a male protester, Yaroslav Ryazanov, was still in detention. Aware of the public backlash, the Russian military has since late 2022 increasingly sought to bolster the forces in Ukraine by enlisting more volunteers. The authorities claimed that about 500,000 signed contracts with the Defense Ministry last year. Still, the wives' and relatives' calls to bring mobilized reservists home have been stonewalled by Russia's government-controlled media, and some pro-Kremlin politicians have sought to cast them as Western stooges. Protesters angrily rejected the accusation. Maria Andreyeva, whose husband and brother are fighting in Ukraine, told SOTAvision that she saw the fighting in Ukraine as "a great tragedy that happened between two brotherly peoples." "Almost every Russian has relatives in Ukraine, close and distant, so... this is a situation that has struck us to the core.

'Ukraine war: No more easy deals'

KYIV (BBC): Russia has been releasing prisoners to fight in Ukraine for more than a year, originally offering them a pardon and freedom after six months, even if they have been convicted of a violent crime. But the BBC has discovered this deal is a thing of the past. Now, they no longer get a pardon, face tougher conditions and instead of going home early, they must fight until the end of the war. "If you sign up now, be ready to die," writes a man called Sergei in a chatroom for former Russian prisoners fighting in Ukraine. He says that since October he's been part of a new type of army unit with the name "Storm V" which convicts are now being assigned to. "Before you could wing it for six months. But now, you have to make it until the end of the war," he writes.

When the mass recruitment of Russian prisoners started in the summer of 2022, it was led by Yevgeny Prigozhin, once the head of the Wagner private military group. Prisoners were offered a clean record, full pardon and allowed to go home after six months on the battlefield. Before he died in a plane crash in August, Prigozhin said that almost 50,000 Russian prisoners had been dispatched to the front line under this deal - similar figures have been cited by human rights activists. Thousands of those prisoners died, but others, including dozens convicted of violent crimes returned home, with some going on to re-offend and even commit murder. The Russian military took over the scheme in February 2023, initially offering the same incentives as Prigozhin.

But the arrangement meant prisoners released to fight could go home after six months and were in a more privileged position than regular soldiers. That upset men who had been mobilised and their families. Now, new conditions for prisoners redress that balance and are far stricter. From reviewing messages in chatrooms and speaking to fighters and relatives, the BBC can confirm that Storm V troops are currently serving along the front line, from Zaporizhia in the south of Ukraine to Bakhmut in the east.

One woman from the Transbaikal region in Russia's Far East, who wished to remain anonymous, told the BBC her husband was recruited into one of the Storm V squads at the beginning of autumn 2023. She would not reveal what crime he had committed, but said it was "a serious charge." She said they made the decision together that he would fight in Ukraine, believing it would result in a quicker release. "This February would have been 15 years since he was sentenced. He had another four to go," she said. "Conditions in the prison were OK. He could have continued to serve his sentence, but this was the only way to get him home quickly."

She said his contract with the Russian Ministry of Defence was for a year, not six months, as it was for previous prisoners. And when her husband's time is up, he won't get a pardon and won't be able to go home immediately as the contract "will be automatically extended".

UK warns of food crisis triggered by war in Ethiopia

LONDON (BBC): In Ayder hospital in Mekelle, the capital of Ethiopia's Tigray region, the corridors are filled with the hubbub of any busy medical facility. But in the paediatric wing, there is a stillness to the wards. For here lie children numbly bearing witness to the latest food crisis to ravage northern Ethiopia. Mostly babies, they are suffering from severe acute malnutrition.

Their mothers sit silently at their beds, staring into the middle distance, clutching their infants to their breast, hoping what milk they have can deliver the salvation for which they yearn. For they and Ethiopia are suffering once again from a devastating legacy of conflict and drought, twin evils that in recent years have destroyed farms and crops and forced millions from their homes. The government says 16 million people across the country are facing food shortages, with almost half of those suffering emergency or severe levels of food insecurity. That means many are not just hungry, they are starving. This is why Tsaga Tsigabu, 23, and her four-month-old son, Kidisty, are languishing in Ayder hospital. Her family were farmers. But their crops failed and they moved to Mekelle to try to survive. Like so many others, they ended up in a camp for people forced from their homes.

Mrs Tsaga's husband was in the army but he injured his hand and cannot work. She took her baby for a vaccination and the nurses saw instantly it was malnourished. "Even when I was pregnant, I was not eating a balanced diet," Mrs Tsaga tells us. "I was not producing enough breast milk, that's why the baby has developed malnutrition. I just didn't have enough to eat at home." Doctors at the hospital tell us the numbers of severely malnourished children being admitted have doubled since 2020 when the war between Tigrayan forces and Ethiopian and Eritrean armies began. A ceasefire was agreed in 2022 but the impact of the conflict still lingers with at least one million people still unable to return home remaining in the region. We travelled with the British Africa minister, Andrew Mitchell, to Agulae, an hours' drive north into the hills, where a clinic was assessing children from outlying villages. He watched as anxious mothers lined up to have the circumference of their children's arms measured; the less flesh on the bone, the more likely the malnutrition. The nurses showed him their charts and they all told a similar story of the numbers getting worse.

"There is a real risk of famine if we don't now take action," Mr Mitchell told the BBC. "There are serious indicators of the danger of famine. If you ask me, 'Is there a famine taking place now in Ethiopia?' I say no, and we have the power to stop it. But if we don't take the necessary action now, then there is every danger that a famine will engulf this war-torn country which has suffered so much already." He promised Britain would commit a further £100m ($125m) to help up to three million mothers and babies in Ethiopia get access to health care; a new fund to provide medicines and vaccines designed to end preventable deaths.

But is famine in Ethiopia really likely? International aid agencies are cautious about using what some call "the F-word". It has a precise technical definition - 20% of households facing extreme food shortages, 30% of children under five with acute malnutrition, and two people out of every 10,000 dying every day. Few suggest those criteria have been formally met in Ethiopia. But for Getachew Reda, president of the Tigray interim regional administration, those definitions are otiose.

He told the BBC there was an "unfolding famine" in Tigray. The numbers of those "staring death in the eye" were rising all the time, he told us, criticising the international community for its "lacklustre" response. "One thing I know is that thousands of people who would otherwise have been able to feed themselves are not in a position to feed themselves and are succumbing to death because of starvation," Mr Getachew said. "Whether you call it famine or a risk of famine or a potential famine, for me it's purely academic... What transpired in 1985, for example, would pale into comparison, if we fail to address the kind of unfolding famine that's staring us in the eye."

What he was referring to were the devastating crises of the mid-1980s when many hundreds of thousands died in a famine in Tigray and elsewhere. The BBC's powerful reporting of the humanitarian disaster prompted a wave of publicity and campaigning, including the Live Aid concert led by the musician Bob Geldof. These comparisons infuriate the federal government in Addis Ababa which denies there is famine.

Shiferaw Teklemariam, commissioner of the Ethiopian disaster risk management commission, said Ethiopia was a victim of climate change. He warned regional governments against politicising the issue and urged them and the international community to do more. "There is a drought, no famine," Mr Shiferaw told the BBC. "The government is responding very seriously, but at the same time we call on all stakeholders to do their share." There are politics here. Past famines in Ethiopia have sometimes been linked to the downfall of governments. Analysts say the word makes the current administration - led by Prime Minister Abiy Ahmed - nervous.

Brazil sees dengue cases quadruple

BRASILIA (AFP): The number of dengue fever cases in Brazil since January 1 is four times higher than the same period last year, government data showed, ahead of the launch of a vaccination campaign.

In the first four weeks of 2024, 262,247 probable cases were recorded, compared to 65,366 in the same period last year, according to the latest figures available from the Brazilian Health Ministry's database. Fabio Baccheretti, president of the National Council of Health Secretaries, pointed to high temperatures as a major factor behind the spread of the mosquito-borne illness. "The record temperatures at the end of last year, with the El Nino phenomenon, are a new and determining factor," he told AFP.

Dengue fever has killed 29 people this year in Latin America's largest country, and an additional 173 deaths are being evaluated for possible links to the disease. Mosquito-borne dengue, which can cause hemorrhagic fever, infects an estimated 100 million to 400 million people yearly around the world, although most cases are mild or asymptomatic, the World Health Organization says. "We are seeing that dengue is spreading in areas that were previously free in Brazil, so we must follow this phenomenon closely," Baccheretti warned. Health services are already under strain in many metropolitan areas in Brazil due to the rising caseload.

In the capital district of Brasilia, a field hospital will begin receiving dengue patients starting next week. The most affected state thus far is southeast Minas Gerais, the second most populated in Brazil, with more than 88,587 probable cases reported. Outside the state capital of Belo Horizonte, teams of fumigators are going door-to-door as part of a campaign against disease-spreading mosquitos. Members are equipped with gas masks and dressed in white head-to-toe coveralls.

"It's sometimes difficult to get into people's homes, but they're starting to see that there are a lot of cases around them and are becoming more understanding," said supervisor Katia Batista. Two weeks ago, the Brazilian government announced that a free vaccination campaign targeting 3.2 million people would take place in February, with priority given to children aged 10 to 14, the group with the highest number of hospitalizations. However, available doses are limited due to a shortage of supply from the vaccine's developer, Japanese pharmaceutical company Takeda, Brazil's health ministry said. In all, the nation of 203 million people expects this year to receive 6.5 million doses of the two-dose vaccine, which is tailored for children.

A year on from Turkey's earthquake disaster, trauma haunts survivors

ISTANBUL: When Elmas Abdulghani has a flashback, her body still shakes like the floor of her apartment on that early February morning a year ago. She was woken up by the screams of her husband, crying: "Elmas, wake up! Save your life!" "I just remember fear and confusion," 35-year-old Abdulghani says, almost tearing up as her mind travels back in time. Abdulghani's husband did not survive the first magnitude 7.8 earthquake, followed by a second magnitude 7.6 one later in the day and hundreds of aftershocks, that killed more than 50,000 people in southeastern Turkey and northern Syria on February 6 last year. But Abdulghani did and, since that day, she has had to deal with the restlessness of mind that came from losing the love of her life and her home in Gaziantep, an important city in the southeast a few kilometres from the epicentre.

The earthquakes created unimaginable psychological stressors for survivors like Abdulghani, from injuries and lasting fear of aftershocks to experiencing the destruction, displacement and deaths around them. A few weeks after the physical emergency needs were met, groups of volunteer therapists and mental health NGO workers were deployed across the region to support victims and help them process their trauma. "I've worked on other earthquakes and natural disasters in our country, such as the 1999 earthquake in Izmir, but this was different from any other," says Hayal Demirci, a psychotherapist from the EMDR Trauma Recovery Group, which has deployed teams of mental health workers in tented settlements, container cities, hotels and temporary dormitories since early March last year. In the first few weeks of their deployment, Demirci and more than 1,000 volunteer therapists worked to provide a physically safe environment to reduce people's acute reactions and, after a while, to establish a safe therapeutic bond and work with these reactions.

Demirci explains that when the normal bonds between people disappear, the "There have been way too many losses of family members, friends, limbs, homes, cities and hope for the future. "When these defence mechanisms are active, the sympathetic nervous system is on duty and the person [feels] like they are in danger all the time. It's not possible for people who don't feel safe anywhere, at any time, to eat, sleep or meet their basic needs properly," she says. Most people, even after the aftershocks eventually disappeared, felt restless for months.

"Even though my family house was declared safe one week after the earthquake, I still didn't feel safe staying inside," says Mert Ozyurtkan, a 22-year-old engineering student at Gaziantep University. "I would constantly stare at water bottles to see if the water was moving or at ceiling lamps to check if they were swinging slightly. It increased my anxiety levels, and affected my grades." While most mental health support in crises focuses on a short-term, emergency approach, Demirci underlines the importance of continuing to work with victims online to address triggers and control flashbacks to reduce any symptoms.

For some, the earthquake changed entire lifestyles. Neslihan Hicdonmez and her husband Ali Ozaslan started living in a camper van and kept their camping sleeping bags at hand because they no longer felt safe in their own home. "The earthquake totally impacted our way of living. We had never thought of abandoning our newly bought house, but we constantly live with the fear that something of that magnitude may happen again."

If adults find the effects catastrophic, for children in their early development the disaster left an indelible mark. Sare Bitir, a fourth-grader at Ilkokulu Elementary School in Gaziantep, still brings her doll to school for comfort. "It's the first object I brought with me when we ran out of the house," she says. "I kept me company for three days while we were sleeping in our car because our house didn't make us feel safe. It gives me confidence."

Children are among the most exposed group, says clinical psychologist Zeynep Bahadir, who has expertise in post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) and volunteered for six weeks with the Turkish Red Crescent as an emergency online psychologist for families with young children. She adds that whether children have been directly affected or experienced secondary trauma, "they can be at the risk of post-traumatic stress disorder symptoms, including nightmares and avoidance behaviour". Separation anxiety specifically has shown up in school settings. When she returned to school in September, Sare did not want to enter the class, too afraid to say goodbye to her parents.

It took a very patient teacher and friendly classmates to bring her inside, although, for the first few weeks, she couldn't focus. Some children avoided school for several weeks in a row. According to Bahadir, fear can persist in children long after the earthquake has passed, which "sometimes can be temporary, but can also adapt into their lives forever". The situation has been worse for Syrian refugees in Turkey who fled there during Syria's war, says Yara al-Atrash, a mental health worker at INARA NGO.

Al-Atrash has been in charge of psychological assistance to Syrians living in container camps and assisted many who have lost homes and children, just like they did during the war back home. "Having to live again the trauma of death, loss and displacement, as well as realising that the new place that gave them safety was no longer safe, was a last blow to those who had survived the Syrian conflict," she says. Abdulghani, who lived through an offensive in her hometown of Homs, Syria, says the earthquakes reawakened traumas she thought she had healed.

She had not sought therapy, even after the war, but her restlessness as the one-year mark since the earthquake neared finally made her seek help about two months ago. Now Abdulghani has been living in Istanbul since February 2023, incapable of returning to Gaziantep and reliving her trauma. In therapy, she hopes to address this fear to be able to finally return. "Therapy culture is not yet something known in our region, especially in the earthquake zone and villages, which were however the most impacted," Demirci says. Many said they were not ready for therapy, but emergency workers tried to encourage them to speak about their wounds. "Those who do not receive support in the acute period may, in the long term, suffer from addictions, including alcohol and drugs, anger and impulse control problems, or even somatic issues such as fibromyalgia, or migraine," Demirci adds. — Aljazeera

General elections and need for nationalism

THE February 8 General Elections have reached overhead and the nearly 240 million nation is currently geared up to cast the vote and enjoy the full swing of this nationwide activity that comes after five long years. The Election Commission has already informed about the completion of the training of its over one and a half million election staff while 260 million ballot papers were printed to facilitate the voting for the National Assembly and all four provincial Assemblies in the country. February 8th will be observed as a holiday wherein the provincial and District administrations have already taken all necessary steps to ensure the smooth and peaceful conduct of the Electoral process.

In the majority of parts of the country, strict security measures have been in place inside the polling stations, while the Army and paramilitary troops have been deployed to maintain law and order situations and provide foolproof security to Election staff and transportation of election material. Necessary administrative arrangements have been finalized and all available resources have been deployed to create a conducive environment for all election candidates, voters, and the general public as well. Special focus has been given to safety/ security along with the maintenance of writ of the law at sensitive polling stations amid serious risk of terrorism and violence from proscribed terrorist outfits during the election days. As said, cameras have been installed at sensitive locations for CCTV monitoring, control rooms at the Chief Minister's Secretariat, Home Departments, Ministry of Interior, and emergency services in hospitals have been established to cater for any unforeseen situation during the election.

All that was from the government side, including the ECP, federal and Provincial governments, and district administrations, while the rest of the crucial part dearly needed from the political groups, the election candidates, their workers and supporters, and the general public are still awaited to be honored by the concerned individuals, party and the overall public that will make this month-long exercise successful and high yielding. There is a dire need for collaboration from both candidates and the public to ensure the success of the upcoming general elections. There is a need for cooperation with the administration, police, and election commission staff to guarantee security, seamless logistical arrangements, and overall maintenance of law and order before, during, and after the polls. So, a free, fair, impartial, and credible election could be ensured which provides all contesting political parties and candidates an equal level playing field, whereas, people also exercise their right to vote without any pressure, coercion, and risk of insecurity throughout the electoral process across the country.

As the election date approaches, government departments and LEAs should remain vigilant to foil the attempts of anti-state elements, miscreants, and criminals so they cannot derail this process through terrorist activity by targeting any important political figure, candidate, or political rally. The urgency for striving to create a conducive environment for a democratic and peaceful electoral process has much importance. Simitingly, the candidates and civic groups must adhere to Election Commission SOPs and work closely with the administration to maintain a secure and orderly electoral process. Whilst, the need for the government, public, and contesting parties' collaboration is of utmost importance to safely and smoothly steer from this important constitutional process. This teamwork and cooperation is also vital for the forthcoming transition and success of the newly elected government. So, that performs well and delivers to the public during its term in office. All that is the beauty of democracy and the essence of patriotism and nationalism of a nation in the contemporary world.

Doha conference on Afghanistan

ACCORDING to the media, during a meeting with the Head of the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA), the Afghan caretaker Foreign Minister, Amir Khan Muttaqi asked the UN official to brief the Afghan authorities about the agenda of the Doha Conference on Afghanistan. According to Muttaqi, the Islamic Emirate delegation will consider its participation in the meeting based on the briefing. Mr Muttaqi also expressed the Islamic Emirate's stance regarding the UN Security Council Resolution 2721 and emphasized the constructive interaction between the Islamic Emirate and the UN.

The UN-led Doha conference on Afghanistan is scheduled to be held on 18-19 February in Doha Qatar. This will be the second meeting of its kind under the UN Secretary-General's initiative on Afghanistan. Previously, about 25 countries from across the world including donor nations, P5, and Afghanistan's neighbouring States attended the May 2023 huddle in Qatar but the Taliban was not invited to the meeting, which failed to produce the required results. The policy of isolation and disassociation from Kabul largely proved to be counterproductive for the global community and the Taliban as well, because the South Asian country experienced the worst economic and humanitarian crises, whereas, the Taliban leaders resorted to their previous policies concerning human and women rights, political exclusiveness and single party rule etc. Therefore, the people of Afghanistan have been the biggest victims of the global isolation and containment of their country.

Realistically, the Doha conference is an important global forum that provides equal opportunities to both, the UN-led global community as well as the Taliban-led Afghan government. Through participation in the global huddle, the Islamic Emirate will be able to put its case to the global community, while the rest of the world will have a window to leverage its influence over the Afghan interim government. There will be a bargain, the global community can achieve its agenda while allowing some concessions to the Islamic Emirate. Similarly, Kabul rulers can pave the way for the global recognition of their rule in the country by admitting some demands of the global community. In fact, the world and the Afghan interim government must avail this occasion and open up a window for cooperation that will not only resolve political and security challenges that stemmed out of the country in the past few months but also bring peace and prosperity to the people of Afghanistan, who deserve it most at this point in time.

What the West gets wrong on Stalin and Putin

Jade McGlynn

LAST month, a new 'Stalin Center' was opened in Barnaul, Siberia. Its aim, like its predecessors' in the Russian cities of Penza and Bor, is to glorify the Communist dictator. Alongside a marked increase in Stalin statues across Russia - more than 100 since 2012 - the Stalin centers appear to affirm a simplistic story: The Kremlin is rehabilitating the 'Vozhd', or great leader.

But deeper inspection complicates the story. The first Stalin cultural center opened in 2016, in the western Russian city of Penza, with the support of local Communists - but not Russian President Vladimir Putin's United Russia party. The second such center, which opened in 2021 in Bor, also in the west of the country, was originally a private initiative by a local Communist businessman. It began with a statue of Stalin looming over the Volga River. The mayor of Bor even petitioned for its removal, albeit unsuccessfully.

And now the most recent center, in Barnaul. It was established by the Communists of Russia, a radical and marginal Stalinist party that is separate to the much larger pro-Kremlin Russian Communist Party. In other words, these centers, like many of the new Stalin monuments, are not Kremlin-imposed but rather grassroots or at least non-state initiatives. Perhaps this should not be surprising. According to the independent Levada Center, Stalin has taken first place in their 'who is the greatest figure of all times and all people' survey since 2012. Of course, this favorable view is not uncontested. The Russian human rights organization Memorial worked tirelessly for over 30 years to document Soviet crimes, which were widely discussed during the Gorbachev and post-Soviet era.

More recently, Russian journalist and YouTube star Yury Dud powerfully depicted the horrors and legacy of Stalinist Gulag forced labor camps in his 2019 documentary "Kolyma: Birthplace of Our Fear." The YouTube video has over 29 million views. Putin's treatment of Stalin takes both of these stances into consideration.

Rather than a glorification of the Communist dictator, he offers a somewhat equivocating view that strives to placate both pro- and anti-Stalin constituencies within Russian society. To do so, he glosses over but does not deny the large scale of the Communist dictator's terror and repressions. In 2017, Putin unveiled Russia's first monument to the victims of Stalin's repressions in Moscow: the "Wall of Grief." During the opening, he asserted: "We must never again push society to the dangerous precipice of division."

Over his 24 years in power, Putin's rhetoric on Stalin has remained reasonably consistent. He does not deny Stalin's crimes but rather tries to divert attention away from them, admitting the horror of the Gulag and mass repressions

Beyond the drastically different scales of repression, the most obvious one is that Stalinism was a deeply mobilizing ideology that sought to remake man and undertook industrialisation with unprecedented scale and speed.

but insisting that the memory of these crimes should not overshadow Stalinism's achievements. In his view, efforts to overly 'demonize' Stalin are part of an attack on Russia. While Putin has shown little enthusiasm for glorifying Stalin, his government has worked methodically to silence, or at least render abstract, the memory of the Gulag's victims. For example, the "Perm-36" memorial complex, Russia's only remaining intact Gulag, was taken over by local authorities in 2015. When it reopened, individual stories of the prisoners' lives were replaced by content celebrating the prison guards and the camp's contribution to timber production during World War II. Elsewhere, the 2021 shutdown of Memorial - which documented Soviet human rights abuses especially during the Great Terror - and the recent removal of 'last address' plaques marking victims sent to the Gulag, were almost certainly state-directed initiatives that seek to erase reminders of the human cost of Stalinist repressions.

However, their removal cannot be reduced to the question of Stalin's legacy alone - it can also be seen as an attempt to eliminate evidence of the crimes of the security services, in which Putin's career and power base are rooted. After all, thinking about the individual victims leads to thinking about the individual perpetrators. The erasure of personalized reminders of the Gulag and Terror must be contextualized within the Kremlin's use of history and myth to legitimize the Putinist regime, Russia's war on Ukraine, and the country's great power status. As the prosecutor at Memorial's liquidation trial in 2021 argued: "Memorial besmirches our history. It forces us - a generation of victors and the heirs of victors - to justify our history."

Likewise, if one argues that Putin is the only driving force behind Stalin's rehabilitation, then one can also continue the fantasy that, if it weren't for Putin, Russians would embrace Westernized liberal democracy and stop justifying the sacrifice of thousands of lives for the whims of the state. These assumptions are flawed and lacking in nuance, no matter how comforting such a shallow understanding of Russian society might be. The Western tendency to reduce mass-scale crime to an omnipotent leader has always been a misleading one. Even Stalinism was not the work of one man, but of the security services and individuals willing to denounce their fellow neighbors for housing rights or petty grievances, as the Kyiv-born Russian writer Mikhail Bulgakov so mercilessly satirized in his short stories of the time. Likewise, efforts to pretend that Putinism is just the work of one man will lead to myopic thinking and poor analytical predictions regarding Russia's future.

The question of Putin's position on Stalinism suggests he is far from the all-powerful instigator of a Stalin cult and rather a manipulative manager of divergent, pro- and anti-Stalin societal attitudes, which he tries to balance and fuse into a workable and unifying national narrative. That a notable section of Russian society exudes nostalgia for a leader who repressed millions illuminates pervasive and troubling issues that should inform predictions and planning for a post-Putin Russia. The problem is not just one strongman - it is that so many people wanted a strongman in the first place.

Certainly, this is a more pertinent point of comparison than the notion that Putin's regime in any way approximates Stalin's. The estimated imprisonment of between 628 and 1,011 political prisoners in today's Russia is a horrific reminder of the brutal authoritarianism with which the Kremlin rules. But to compare it to the millions worked to death in Siberian labor camps or executed in KGB basements is hyperbolic. Moreover, these comparisons divert attention from important differences between the Stalin and Putin regimes. Beyond the drastically different scales of repression, the most obvious one is that Stalinism was a deeply mobilizing ideology that

Biopics have a special place in our lives

Yossi Mekeberg

THERE has been hardly any good news to report in recent months. Much of our energy is being consumed by following the wars and conflicts that are dominating our lives, or by struggling with the ever-increasing cost of living that is biting hard and, in the parts of the world where it is still winter, the cold and scarcity of daylight is affecting our mood.

No surprise, then, that we are looking, even if only for brief moments, to escape all of this. And what is more comforting than a good movie? There is no shortage of offerings. In fact, we are spoiled for choice, whether we make the old-fashioned visit to our local cinema or take the indolent option of turning to one of the online movie platforms, stocking up with plenty of popcorn and soda and immersing ourselves in some drama on the screen, after which we feel more able to face the real world more positively. And nothing captures our imagination more than a movie that is based on a true story, in particular a biopic - a movie based on a real life or lives.

This raises the question, if cinema is some sort of escapism, why does it matter to us whether the movie is based on a true story or is a complete fiction? On movie review websites such as Rotten Tomatoes and IMDb, biopics tend to score higher than fiction dramas. Earlier this month, the movie "Oppenheimer" - which follows the life of Robert Oppenheimer, the American theoretical physicist credited with being the "father of the atomic bomb" due to his role in the Manhattan Project - dominated this year's Golden Globes and is expected to do well at the Oscars, even though the main protagonist spent most of the rest of his life regretting his contribution to modern warfare.

One of its likely rivals at the Academy Awards is Martin Scorsese's "Killers of the Flower Moon," which is also based on a true story and focuses on a series of murders of members of the Osage Nation after oil was discovered on their land. Another is "Maestro," which focuses on the life of the great American composer and conductor Leonard Bernstein. Should one of these three win in the "Best Movie" category, it would join a long line of successes in this genre, going back to "The Great Ziegfeld" of 1936, which have been not only recognized by the movie makers' peers but have also done very well at the box office. Moreover, statistically, those who star in biopics are more likely both to be nominated and also to win the "Best Actor" prize not only at the Oscars but in any of the big awards ceremonies. No surprise, then, that the industry itself is happy to meet the demand and is producing increasing numbers of biopics.

One explanation for the success of biopics is down to them serving an emotional need, in the nicest possible sense. People like to identify with the range of emotions and the successes and failures of the featured person and, chiefly, their ability to overcome hardship against the odds. Especially as we know that this is no fantasy, but is something that happened to flesh-and-blood people much like ourselves. And if such people are capable of prevailing despite all obstacles, surely we too can successfully confront our own hardships, big and small. What is more, in fulfilling our need for heroes to inspire us, sometimes both the featured characters and those who play them become our heroes and role models. There is something else that is unique to biographical movies: they are an interface between art, entertainment and the acquisition of knowledge. Some might even regard them as educational, which supplies an added value. It almost makes it more justifiable to spend two or three hours - and biopics tend to be longer than other movies - quenching our thirst for knowledge, while others have done the research for us.

However, biopics can be easily confused with documentaries, which they are not, because their writers and directors allow themselves the artistic freedom not to distort facts, but to dramatize them. The biopic bears more resemblance to the docudrama, which is based on real events and may include interviews with people who have been part of the story, while not necessarily adhering to all the facts. These genres are sometimes more impressionistic than realistic. When much of what takes place around us is uninspiring, we as human beings often need inspiration and biopics give us exactly that. They give us the impetus to believe in a world in which everything is possible if we only put our mind to it and stay resolute. Sadly, we are seldom inspired by our political leaders or those in other walks of life, so why not, in a concentrated and focused way, be inspired by those who have made a huge difference even though they were given a very slim chance of reaching such heights?

Who in our present world could compete in the department of inspiration with the likes of "Lincoln," "Gandhi" or Nelson Mandela in "Long Walk to Freedom"? We also find it comforting that some of our heroes are less than perfect, as we are. They may be geniuses or trailblazers in their own field, such as music, business or sport, but at the same time might even be controversial and struggle, as so many of us do, with other aspects of life. So, watch this space, as this year we can expect an influx of biopics, among whose subjects are the lives of Shirley Chisholm, the first African American woman in Congress, singers Michael Jackson, Amy Winehouse and Maria Callas, and many more.

Some in the film industry argue that the plethora of such movies represents a crisis of self-belief in a business that has lost confidence in fiction scripts and movies based on sheer fantasy, and for whom falling back on stories based on real life seems to be a safer bet. While the popcorn and soda sold in cinemas make more money than the tickets themselves - and while technology continues to change the way we consume entertainment - biopics continue to have a special place in our lives. So, bring them on - the good, the bad and the ugly (which, by the way, was not a biopic).

Taiwan leader shouldn't be a puppet of US

Tommy Suen & Kacee Ting Wong

ALTHOUGH Lai Ching-te has been elected the next leader of Taiwan, his pro-independence stance will further plunge the island into the vortex of Sino-US rivalry. Muddying the political waters further is some US politicians' elusive attempt to build "collective deterrence" against a manufactured delusion of the Chinese mainland's military threat to Taiwan.

That the pro-independence movement in Taiwan poses a serious threat to the core national interests of Beijing and the Chinese people as a whole is evident to all. "Taiwan independence" is regarded by Beijing as a serious threat to the Chinese nation. Outgoing Taiwan leader Tsai Ing-wen's refusal to acknowledge the 1992 Consensus has played a key role in the deterioration of cross-Taiwan Strait relations.

In August 2020, then US secretary of health and human services Alex Azar made a provocative trip to Taiwan to meet Tsai, making him the highest-ranking US official to visit Taiwan in 40 years. In an effort to boost Taiwan's so-called security, Tsai took steps to upgrade military training and cyber defense. Tsai also supported the anti-Beijing demonstrators in Hong Kong in the second half of 2019. The US policy of "strategic ambiguity" has been further clouded in uncertainty. The White House has expressed a few times that Washington would come to Taiwan's aid in the event of the mainland using "force" to reunify the island with the motherland. The US Congress, too, has adopted a hostile attitude toward Beijing. Following former US House of Representatives speaker Nancy Pelosi's provocative visit to Taiwan in August 2022, Beijing-bashers in the Congress have introduced bills that have further poisoned cross-Strait relations. Under the "Taiwan Enhanced Resilience Act" passed in 2022, Washington is committed to providing up to $2 billion annually in military aid to Taiwan between 2023 and 2027. Recently, the House of Representatives advanced three bipartisan finance bills on Taiwan, bringing legislation to bolster US support for Taiwan. The first bill supports the inclusion of Taiwan as a member of the International Monetary Fund, demonstrating that some US congressmen are still indulging in the fantasy of turning the Taiwan question into an international issue. However, the fact is, the Taiwan question is an internal affair of China which brooks no external interference. There is also an ineluctable risk that some US allies share its threat perception of China. Given these disturbing developments, Washington should exercise restraint in managing its disputes with Beijing over the Taiwan question and stop taking provocative actions that may result in a mutually destructive cycle of retaliation. As for US allies, they should weigh the pros and cons of giving unconditional support to Washington in cross-Strait affairs. More important, the US allies should not look at the issue through the US' lens.

As a University of Colorado professor Steve Chan has correctly pointed out, any objective composite index seeking to capture the balance of threat is not likely to support the claim that China poses a greater threat to other countries than the US. Besides, the failure of the Democratic Progressive Party to retain a majority in the 113-seat local legislature has provided us with the necessary context within which the balance of power in the legislature in the post-election period cannot be accurately analyzed. And on Thursday, Han Kuo-yu, a former mayor and local leader candidate of Taiwan's main opposition Kuomintang party, was elected as speaker of the island's new legislature. Undoubtedly, Taiwan residents expect the local legislature to address their livelihood issues. Partly due to the above expectations, and partly because of Taiwan's close economic ties with the mainland, the opposition parties could force Lai to adopt a more cautious cross-Strait policy and refrain from provoking Beijing. It is highly likely that Lai will find it difficult to reduce or remove the traditional Chinese elements from the island's culture and education. And the fact that the opposition parties combined have a majority in the legislature means the legislature can order the formation of an inquiry commission to examine whether the arms procurement agreements with the US contain any unfair and/or discriminatory terms. Legislators from the opposition parties could also push for reforms to allow the island's legislators to maintain regular communication with mainland officials responsible for cross-Strait affairs.

Also, Lai would do good to promote cultural exchanges, allow mainland tourists and students to visit the island and enroll in Taiwan universities. And hopefully, he will also allow think tanks on both sides of the Strait to attend seminars together, and allow researchers to focus on the implementation of "one country, two systems" on the lines of the Hong Kong and Macao special administrative regions and promote the peaceful reunification of the Chinese nation.

Tory party's total surrender is paving way for a British Trump

Allister Heath

THERE are two viable ways to respond to an existential threat in the state of nature: fight or flight. You either destroy your predator, or you run away. You don't just stand still, wave a white flag and wait for the end. The same is true in the political jungle, and yet the Tories' nervous systems are now so dysfunctional that they have produced neither of the rational physiological responses to the terrifying likelihood of a Labour landslide.

Rather than launching the fight of its life, the Government's reaction has been to freeze, to keep making the same mistakes, to double-down on the same flawed strategy, to do little and to say even less; as political death wishes go, this one takes some beating.

Wouldn't it at least make sense to try not to lose the election, and to declare total war against the Labour Party, the Left-wing lawyers, the socialist left servants and the woke Blob? Would it not be a good idea to seek to regain the initiative or to mould the news agenda? Such an obvious approach is apparently too arduous, too politically incorrect: it's less controversial to roll over and accept defeat. The Tories cannot even organise a proper putsch: Sir Simon Clarke's half-hearted attempt at ousting Rishi Sunak was never going to succeed. Clarke is right that the Tories' current strategy guarantees an electoral massacre - almost all Conservative MPs privately agree - but his colleagues won't remove the Prime Minister. Apart from anything else, a successful coup requires a leader in waiting who could gain the support of enough MPs while promising significant improvement in the polls.

The Tories are so divided between their three warring factions - the woke Lefties who wouldn't be out of place in the Liberal Democrats, the centrist careerists, and the squabbling Right-wingers - that they would find it impossible to agree on a successor, let alone to back the sorts of policies that the public might actually want. Sunak's greatest mistake is an analytical one. He doesn't understand that Britain's centre-Right electorate - in common with its counterparts in other Western democracies - has changed dramatically. Potential Tory voters used to be broadly supportive of authority and opposed to Left-wing attempts at disrupting the status quo; today, they are largely insurgents who feel under pressure from a hostile Leftist elite and who believe the economy and society to be broken.

Republican primary voters are now certain to reselect Donald Trump; on the Continent, euro-sceptic parties are on the rise everywhere, fuelled further by an eruption of farmers' protests across Europe. Old centre-Right parties are dying or have entirely reinvented themselves, and populist politics continues to gain ground. The British electorate thought that it was voting for change in 2016 and 2019, but was severely disappointed. Its appetite for radicalism hasn't waned. It is preparing to punish the Tories for their betrayal, but it hasn't fallen in love with Keir Starmer, a central figure in the Left-wing, business-as-usual establishment it has come to despise.

British centre-Right voters want competent leadership, but above all radical change. They are desperate for politicians who break the mould, who defy the establishment. They are extremely angry at the state of Britain, and at the record of all the political parties. They are, in other words, and whether we like it or not, on the hunt for a British Trump. To be clear, I don't mean somebody who cannot tell the truth, or who cannot accept defeat at elections. I mean somebody who, like the former US president, is an outsider, isn't the product of Westminster, who "tells it as it is", who is pro-growth, who isn't hamstrung by net zero or human rights laws, and who would be willing to do what it takes to crack down on crime and regain control of immigration.

Sunak briefly dabbled with a more popular approach to politics, but didn't communicate it well and quickly reverted to type. He represents a technocratic version of the centre-Right that is actually not very good at solving complex technical problems and which has no future. It can't truly address immigration, increase growth, build more homes, tackle extremism, reform the NHS properly, reduce welfareism or even fix potholes. The PM's situation is thus disastrous. The recent YouGov MMR poll in The Telegraph put the Tories on 26 per cent of the vote, even with relatively benign assumptions; the most recent regular YouGov poll has them on 20 per cent. Redfield & Wilton on 22 per cent and WeThink on 23 per cent.

These are apocalyptic numbers, and they have been trending downwards. The best that the Tories can now hope for is a 1997-style disaster, when they collected 30.7 per cent of the vote; this truly would represent a miraculous recovery, given how badly they are performing in the polls. The worst case scenario would be a replay of the 1993 Canadian general election, when the ruling Progressive Conservatives were wiped out, holding just two seats on 16 per cent, thanks to the emergence of a new Right-wing party appropriately called Reform, which grabbed 18 per cent and 52 seats. The parallels with the present situation are uncanny: the Progressive Tories had triumphed in the previous election with 43 per cent of the vote, exactly Boris Johnson's share.

A crucial question is whether Nigel Farage properly re-enters the fray at the head of his very own Reform party. He isn't quite a British Trump - his appeal is more narrowly on the Right - but he may very well be elected in Clacton and would undoubtedly give his party a huge boost. The Tories fell to 165 seats in 1997 (out of 659) and 156 (out of 670) in 1996; their floor this time around could be substantially lower. In the short-term, the Government needs some high-profile Rwanda deportations, a game-changing abolition of inheritance tax, and extended scrutiny of Labour's more unpopular policies if it is to avoid obliteration. But unless it embraces a very different approach, the most successful political party in history may finally have had its day. New political vehicles can emerge even under first past the post, as the rise of the Labour Party in the 1920s demonstrates, and the gap in the marketplace is just as wide 100 years on. Will the next conservative Prime Minister really be a member of the Conservative party?

What explains Nikki Haley's new tone

Julian Zelizer

REPUBLICAN presidential candidate Nikki Haley is finally unleashing on her opponent, former President Donald Trump. Although she spent much of her time during the Iowa caucuses and New Hampshire primary focused on Florida Gov. Ron DeSantis, generally avoiding being very tough with the former president or going so far as to defend him during his legal problems, now she has changed her tone.

In a pre-taped interview with Charlamagne the God on "The Breakfast Club" that aired Wednesday morning, Haley lit into Trump without much restraint, calling him "toxic" and saying that he lacked "moral clarity." He "broke" things and divided people, she said. Haley has unveiled a series of video ads mocking President Joe Biden and Trump, calling them "grumpy old men." She questioned Trump's mental condition for the first time last month, stirring concerns about mistakes and misstatements that he has been making on the campaign trail - not under the guise of spreading disinformation but because, she maintained, he is too old to handle this job. When Trump appeared to confuse her with former House Speaker Nancy Pelosi during a speech about January 6, Haley jumped at the opportunity to criticize him.

"The concern I have is," she said, "I'm not saying anything derogatory, but when you're dealing with the pressures of a presidency, we can't have someone else that we question whether they're mentally fit to do so." According to Haley, Trump is too busy raising money to pay for his ballooning legal expenses to focus attention on the campaign. She has been warning conservative donors that Trump's nomination could easily cost the GOP control of the House. We don't know for sure why Haley has decided that the time has finally come to directly take on the former president and avoid the sort of milquetoast statements that had thus far characterized her campaign rhetoric.

Obviously, the fact that Gov. DeSantis and all the other Republicans have dropped out of the competitition fundamentally changed the nature of the game. No longer having to compete to win over the "anti-Trump" vote, which she now owns, the former ambassador can turn all of her attention and firepower in a different direction. Haley must also realize that the risk of angering Trump voters has become less pertinent than the potential gain from solidifying and energizing those in the party who want a different choice. Under current conditions, Haley needs support from those factions of donors and voters who can sustain her run as long as possible, perhaps anticipating the potential for a legal conviction to render his candidacy untenable.

With this mindset, the goal is not to defeat Trump in the next few rounds of competition, but to remain credible enough with those who dislike him to survive for another day. The only way to do this is to distinguish what she offers from what Trump has promised - avoiding the trap DeSantis fell into of thinking that being "Trump-lite" could have appeal when the real Trump was already on the ballot. After watching Trump, as well as her Tea Party colleagues, Haley has seen how provocative and controversial statements, along with smash mouth attacks, are the best way to keep the eyes of the press upon her. Questioning Trump's mental dexterity is literally taking a page out of her opponent's playbook.

Some of her switch in tone is also a sign of sheer desperation. Despite all of her optimism, she and her team understand that the odds of her winning are extraordinarily low. She lost in the one state - New Hampshire - where she stood the likeliest chance of winning, and Trump performed as well as he needed to in order to demonstrate that his support among primary voters is solid. Polls show her trailing Trump in a number of states. Her only hope is to develop an effective and blistering line of attack that devastates Trump's brand value. But, if the latest Washington Post-Monmouth University poll is any indicator, the new tactic is coming quite late. The poll ahead of the February 24 South Carolina primary shows Trump holds a sizeable 26-point lead over Haley in the state.

Trump, who probably sensed that the his criminal trials offered a platform to advance his narrative about being the true anti-establishment figure and who figured out, through his appearances in the courtroom and refusal to debate the other Republican candidates, how to dominate the media stage, has solidified his position among those who are coming out to vote. He has also successfully sold a narrative about himself. Rather than being a one-term president who cost his party power on Capitol Hill and faces unprecedented legal charges (he denies all wrongdoing), Trump has used the last few months to falsely sell himself to Republican voters as a victim: he is the victim of a stolen election, he is the victim of a president out to get his opponent, he is even a victim of a Republican establishment desperate to bring him down so that they can protect Wall Street and war making.

While it doesn't take much research to demonstrate how this entire story doesn't fit the facts, the storyline appears to be setting in for much of the red electorate, to the point it is difficult for Haley to undo. In presidential campaigns, perceptions can set in quickly and become hard to shake. Indeed, though it is not impossible to believe that his confusing Haley and Pelosi was in fact intentional - an effort to confuse voters in suggesting that the very conservative Haley is actually a Democrat in Republican clothing. The odds are low that Haley's attacks will do much to significantly change Trump's narrative.

Haley's best bet is that by ramping up the intensity of her attacks, she can remain in the political game. Donors who dislike Trump will keep funding her. Voters in primary states who hate Trump and like her will give her enough of a vote to remain relevant. And then, the biggest question of all is whether an opening for Haley would develop if Trump gets convicted in one of the four criminal cases pending against him and, (as some polls suggest) suffers a loss of support.

UK cannot ignore crisis in DRC

Jeremy Corbyn

IN mid-December, I joined hundreds of thousands of people in Central London calling for a ceasefire in Gaza. "We are united", I told the crowd, "in our demand for peace and justice for the Palestinian people." Looking out to a sea of Palestinian flags, I was buoyed by the determination of ordinary people to show solidarity with those living under systems of violence and occupation. And I was moved by their willingness to prove how these systems were global in scope and scale. "I want us all to be active as well," I concluded, "for peace and justice in the other wars that are fuelled by the arms trade - in Sudan, in Yemen, in West Papua, and in the Congo."

Against the global backdrop of deafening silence, the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) is currently experiencing a harrowing humanitarian crisis. Nearly seven million people have been internally displaced in the DRC and 26 million need humanitarian aid. One in three children are out of school. Tens of thousands of civilians experience physical, sexual and gender-based violence, used as a tool of control and degradation. Meanwhile, the DRC remains one of the UNHCR's most underfunded operations worldwide. Today's humanitarian crisis in the DRC did not emerge out of nowhere. It is an enduring legacy of colonial theft, violence and exploitation. During the Atlantic slave trade, more than five million Congolese people were captured, transported to the Americas and enslaved.

Descendants of those who evaded abduction and enslavement would endure the brutality of Belgian King

Leopold II. Amassing enormous riches from slave labour, Leopold was responsible for the deaths of more than 10 million Congolese men, women, and children. Independence in the 1960s was supposed to be a turning point; Patrice Lumumba was democratically elected on the promise of a free Congo. Threatening the interests of Western nations who sought to exploit his country, Lumumba was assassinated on January 17, 1961, with the support of the United States and Belgium.

For the Congolese people, colonial exploitation never ended. Today, the world relies on the DRC for natural resources, including diamonds, gold, timber, copper, oil, and gas. It produces 70 per cent of the world's cobalt, an essential element in almost every lithium-ion rechargeable battery present in mobile phones and laptops many of us use every day. These resources are largely controlled by foreign companies, which profit from resources that should otherwise be owned by the Congolese people. There is a reason why the DRC ranks 179 out of 191 in the Human Development Index - and it is not because the country lacks sufficient resources. It is because these resources are extracted to satisfy foreign corporate greed.

Bloated private corporations do not lose little sleep over the resultant poverty, environmental degradation, or displacement, as communities are forced from their land to make way for mining operations. The continued exploitation of resources has also created a playground for various armed groups, which have used violence to maintain control over mines in the DRC. For decades, civilians have paid a particularly heavy price, most notably in the eastern regions of Ituri, North Kivu and South Kivu. Most recently, on June 11, 2023, an attack on the Lala refugee camp in Ituri province killed 46 people and displaced 7,800.

One of the most notable militia groups is the March 23 Movement (M23). Several human rights organisations, including Human Rights Watch and Amnesty International, as well as the United Nations, have reported that M23 has recruited child soldiers and committed unlawful killings, rape and other war crimes. The same human rights organisations have published evidence that M23 relies on financial and military support from DRC's neighbour, Rwanda. Congolese officials have repeatedly accused Rwanda of plundering their country's natural resources. In an interview for the Financial Times, DRC's finance minister, Nicolas Kazadi, said Kigali exported almost $1bn in gold, tin, tantalum and tungsten in 2022, despite having few of these mineral deposits of its own. The UN has previously documented how minerals mined in the DRC are smuggled into Rwanda where they are tagged as locally produced.

While Belgium, France, and Germany have condemned Rwanda's support for M23, the United Kingdom government refuses to do so. How can they, when an honest recognition of these human rights abuses would expose the illegality of its flagship policy: to deport asylum seekers to Rwanda? Continuing to double down on this policy in the face of court rulings, the government does not just show contempt for people risking their lives to reach a place of safety. It is actively putting them back at risk of persecution.

Our country has played an enormous role in generating the conditions for violence, discrimination and human rights abuses in the DRC, and indeed the Global South. Our government should recognise its responsibility to redress - not aggravate - this colonial trauma. That means, at the very least, fulfilling its international obligations towards the refugees, and their right to live in safety and peace. Indeed, we all have a responsibility to put pressure on our government to do so in the name of decolonisation. Many of the resources that we enjoy on a daily basis - including the technology you might be using to read this very article - rely on the DRC's exploitation. The least we can do is use this technology to effect change. That means writing to your local member of Parliament to ask them to demand that our government unequivocally condemns Rwanda for their support of M23, takes appropriate sanctions, and increases aid to the DRC. Many of those in positions of power and influence pretend as if the plight of people in the Global South simply does not matter. Whenever there is a crisis, if it is in Africa, then it may as well not have happened.

How much more violence, death and displacement should the people of the DRC endure before the international community wakes up and takes action? The people of the DRC - just like the people of Palestine, West Papua, Yemen, Sudan and beyond - deserve to live in peace, justice and freedom. Their voices cannot be ignored any longer.

On the basis of mutual trust

Vladimir Norov

THE world has undergone many changes and shocks in recent years. Enhanced dialogue between scholars from China and overseas is needed to build mutual understanding on many problems the world faces. For this purpose, the China Watch Institute of China Daily and the National Institute for Global Strategy, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, jointly present this special column: The Global Strategy Dialogue, in which experts from China and abroad will offer insightful views, analysis and fresh perspectives on long-term strategic issues of global importance.

The modern system of international cooperation based on universal principles and norms is beginning to fail. One of the main reasons for this is a deep crisis of confidence and the lack of mutual trust at the global level, which, in turn, provokes geopolitical confrontation and regional conflicts, which destabilize trade and investment flows and exacerbate the challenges of ensuring food and energy security.

This fundamental process is accompanied by the trend toward multipolarity, the increasing interdependence of economies and the accelerating pace of digitalization. International threats and challenges are becoming more complex, disruptive and dangerous. The Shanghai Cooperation Organization, established in 2001, is a classic example of an international organization that has successfully established itself as a model for maintaining and strengthening regional security, as well as a multilateral structure that can flexibly and effectively respond to changes at the regional and global levels. In fact, it is a unique interstate structure that has managed to unite countries with different cultures and civilizational inheritances, their own foreign policy guidelines and models of national development. Regional security is an area in which a high level of mutual trust is required. The fact that a high level of mutual trust has developed over the course of more than two decades within the framework of the SCO's work is evidenced by its upholding of the "Shanghai Spirit" of mutual trust, mutual benefit, equality, consultation, respect for cultural diversity and the pursuit of common development.

In a short historical period, the SCO has come a long way, becoming an integral part of the modern global political and economic world order. Over the years of its existence, the SCO has gained considerable political weight and authority on the world stage. One of the main goals of the SCO is to support stability and security in the region. Since its establishment in Tashkent, in 2004, the SCO Regional Anti-Terrorist Structure (RATS) has become the organization's main coordination center in the fight against terrorism, separatism and religious extremism. RATS conducts joint exercises and trainings, exchanges information and develops strategies to counter terrorist and extremist groups, as well as combating drug trafficking in the region. Ensuring information security and responding to challenges and threats on the internet was officially designated as a separate area of the work of RATS in 2023.

RATS actively cooperates with many international organizations such as the United Nations and Interpol, the International Drug Control Agency, the Collective Security Treaty Organization and the Center for Internet Security, and it develops partnerships with other countries and regions to jointly address security problems and threats in the region. The SCO members consider Central Asia to be the organization's core region and the SCO supports the efforts of the Central Asian countries to promote prosperity, peace, sustainable development, and uphold good-neighborliness, trust and friendship. Thanks to effective cooperation within the SCO, the situation in Central Asia is under control, despite some potential security risks. This is the SCO's biggest security achievement in the last 20 years.

The national interests and security of the SCO member states are directly linked to the situation in Afghanistan. That is why the Afghan issue has always been high on the organization's agenda. The SCO members are neighbors of Afghanistan, and therefore the SCO is an ideal platform for dialogue in order to resolve the Afghan issue. All the SCO members support the solution of the Afghan problem through political and diplomatic means and emphasize the need to form an inclusive government. The SCO-Afghanistan contact group can play an important role in this regard. The revival of the contact group can contribute to dialogue and significantly help the Afghan authorities in overcoming economic problems and building up their anti-terrorist potential. Afghanistan, which for centuries has played the role of a buffer between global powers and regional centers of power, should pursue a new peace mission as a link between Central and South Asia.

The construction of the trans-Afghan corridor can become a symbol of such mutually beneficial interregional cooperation. It is also important to understand that implementing common infrastructure projects such as the Uzbekistan-Afghanistan-Pakistan Railway will not just solve socioeconomic, transport and communication problems, but also make significant contributions to regional security. Without the largest SCO countries, it is impossible to imagine global military and nuclear security, as well as the security of outer space and information space. It is important to note that the SCO countries have all the capabilities to ensure the security of global technological progress. It not only has raw materials, such as rare earth metals, that are critical for the Fourth Industrial Revolution, but also a rapidly developing educational and scientific-technical base.

At a time when access to innovation is becoming a focus of geopolitical competition and increasing technological inequality, the SCO can become one of the drivers of technological growth in the developing world. Today, the SCO is a thriving, developing structure that is gradually becoming a pole of attraction for a growing number of regional states, which will stimulate the process of its development, since each of them will bring with it new ideas and proposals, while embracing the "Shanghai Spirit".

The key to the SCO's international attractiveness is its non-aligned status, openness, equality and consensus-based decision-making, non-targeting of third countries or international organizations, respect for the sovereignty of all participants and non-interference in their internal affairs. It is obvious that all this creates a qualitatively new regional reality, while excluding bloc and confrontational approaches to solving international problems, and this will directly affect the entire system of continental and global security.

Four years after Brexit

David Frost

ONE of the more troubling aspects of the current political scene is the return to prominence of those responsible for the constitutional near-meltdown and the collapse of the Conservative Party to 9 per cent of the vote in summer 2019. One such is the former attorney general Dominic Grieve, who left the Tories that autumn, lost his parliamentary seat, and disappeared into obscurity. Yet here he is again, authoring a report published this week on the governance of Britain, together with a bunch of retired judges, lawyers, civil servants, and other such grand panjandrum of the British state.

Their report reveals much about the preoccupations of our permanent mandarin class and the great and the good. Grieve's foreword says "public confidence in our democratic processes is at a low point" (we can all agree with that) and that their proposed solutions would "make the exercise of power in the UK more structured, transparent, effective and responsible". But the solution does not follow from the diagnosis. What the report's authors seem to mean by it is people like them setting limits to, or even controlling, what ignoble politicians are able to do. They want the Civil Service code to be legally binding. Permanent secretaries' accountability to Parliament, not to their ministers, would be strengthened. Political appointments would be severely limited. Appointments to the Lords would be made not by the prime minister but by another independent body composed of...people like them. The Ministerial code would become law and an appointed commissioner would rule on it, with his or her own power to set rules on finances, conflicts, adviser appointments, and, bizarrely, ministerial training. An independent enforcement body would monitor the other bodies. And so on.

In short, actual politics, actual choices made by the electorate, would be replaced by serious responsible people operating serious institutions, totally insulated from populism or any other below-the-salt opinions: Plato's guardians (or should that be Guardian readers?) for the modern world.

I am sure Telegraph readers can see the two big problems with this. First, who says that the commissioners, the experts, the permanent secretaries, know any better than the politicians? Maybe they do, maybe they don't. But if you don't like the government or MPs, you can kick them out.

There's no kicking out the guardians, though, and when you try they are just replaced by others like them. They, however, can get rid of politicians: as we have seen, the parliamentary standards processes now have the de facto power to suspend or even remove MPs, on flimsy grounds, because MPs now dare not challenge the Commission's rulings.

And, second, we've already been trying this and it isn't working. Of course we need effective and respected institutions. What we don't need is a further proliferation of quangos, expert groups, judicial reviews, human rights provisions, Ofcoms and the like. We already have quite enough of these things and they obscure the fact that process is not the same as substance. You can have perfectly operating institutions that are in fact totally incapable of dealing with the country's actual problems - institutions in which the checks and balances, the coordination and scrutiny, have overwhelmed the capacity to make things happen. Just look at housing, at energy, at immigration - and much much more besides.

You might think that "surely these people cannot think that even more of the same is the right solution? Surely they must have learnt something?" Well they don't seem to have learnt from the catastrophic disintegration of the May government. The heart of the problem there was Parliament deciding to act independently on Brexit, as if it were itself the government.

Yet they propose to repeat exactly this - to give Parliament control over the government's business and to make it impossible to call an election ahead of time unless Parliament agrees. They seem to believe, as so many now do, that somehow a formal continental-style separation of powers has crept into UK governance under the cover of EU membership. If so, it needs expunging, not reinforcing.

The truth is that we have badly functioning institutions and we have an elected government that does not properly control the permanent government. The solution is not more of the same. Until we are honest about these realities, until we cut through the thicket of process in the interest of getting things done - as the Government is trying to do on Rwanda, albeit not determinedly enough - voters will continue to despair about the ability of elected politicians to solve their problems. That despair is the real problem the country faces and it needs fixing soon.

Pakistan, China enhance collaboration in pharmaceutical sector

ISLAMABAD (INP): Pakistan and China have further enhanced collaboration in pharmaceutical sector, by launching Basagine Pen, a pre-filled insulin.

The insulin was co-developed by Pakistan Getz Pharma and China Gan&Lee Pharmaceuticals.

This marks a further development in the pharmaceutical collaboration between China and Pakistan, Gwadar Pro reported. The milestone lunching-event was attended by Khalid Mahmood, CEO and Managing Director of Getz Pharma, and Du Kai, CEO of Gan&Lee Pharmaceuticals.

"Getz Pharma has been a trusted overseas partner of our company for over a decade, with previous collaborations involving raw materials of second-generation and third-generation insulin. The launch of the Basagine Pen will further enhance our product portfolio in diabetes treatment, leveraging the strengths of both companies."

Du Kai highlighted the long-standing partnership between the two companies. According to data from the International Diabetes Federation (IDF), Pakistan has approximately 33 million diabetes patients aged 20 to 79, with an annual average expenditure of USD80.1 per patient.

The prevalence of diabetes among adults aged 20 to 79 in Pakistan stands at 30.8%. Unfortunately, many diabetes patients in the country do not have access to timely and adequate medication.

"The introduction of the Basagine Pen holds the promise of improving this situation by providing higher-quality and more accessible medication options for local patients," emphasized the representative from Getz Pharma.

The collaboration between Gan&Lee Pharmaceuticals and Getz Pharma brings together China's advanced pharmaceutical technology and manufacturing capabilities with Pakistan's understanding of the local market and distribution networks.

This synergy allows for the development and availability of innovative treatment options for diabetes patients in Pakistan.

China's road logistics price index up

BEIJING (Xinhua/APP): China's road logistics price index edged up 0.03 percent week on week from Jan. 29 to Feb. 2 as demand in the market remained generally stable amid slower supply expansion, industry data shows.

The country's road logistics index came in at 1,038.95 points last week, according to a survey jointly conducted by the China Federation of Logistics and Purchasing and the Guangdong Lin'an Logistics Group.

The sub-indices of all types of vehicles logged mild increase week on week. Specifically, the figure for the full-truckload logistics price, which primarily measures bulk commodity and cross-regional transportation, stood at 1,040.28 points in the period, up 0.03 percent on a weekly basis. The survey attributed the mild growth of the road logistics price last week to slower supply expansion in the sector amid general stable demand.

Boeing in 'last chance saloon', warns Emirates boss

DUBAI (Monitoring Desk): The boss of Emirates airline has warned Boeing is in the "last chance saloon", saying he had seen a "progressive decline" in its performance.

Boeing has come under scrutiny after a panel on a 737 Max 9 passenger jet blew off mid-air last month.

Emirates president Sir Tim Clark is a leading industry figure and the airline is a major Boeing customer. He also told the Financial Times that Emirates would send its engineers to monitor Boeing's production lines.

In response to Sir Tim's remarks, Boeing pointed to comments its chief executive, Dave Calhoun, made last week, when he said: "We understand why [customers] are angry and we will work to earn their confidence." Emirates told the BBC it had nothing to add to what Sir Tim said in the interview. "They have got to instil this safety culture which is second to none. They've got to get their manufacturing processes under review so there are no corners cut etc," Sir Tim said. "I'm sure Dave Calhoun and [commercial head] Stan Deal are on that... this is the last chance saloon," he added.

Sir Tim was preparing to send Emirates engineers to monitor Boeing's production lines for the first time.

He said the engineers would observe the production process of the 777 at Boeing and its supplier Spirit AeroSystems.

Emirates is one of Boeing's biggest customers.

In November, it placed an order for 95 wide-body Boeing 777 and 787 jets, used for long-haul flights, valued at $52bn (£41.2bn) at list prices.

But Boeing hit the headlines in recent weeks despite the Mr Calhoun insisting the company had changed since he took over after former boss Dennis Muilenburg was fired.

On 5 January a door plug on an Alaska Airlines 737 Max 9 blew off shortly after take-off, terrifying passengers, and forcing an emergency return to the Portland, Oregon airport.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) launched an investigation of Boeing's manufacturing process and barred the firm from expanding production of its popular 737 Max planes. Some of the company's biggest airline customers have also expressed concerns, noting that the issues may delay approval of new versions of the 737 Max plane, the Max 7 and Max 10, that are in the works.

In 2018, a similar incident to what happened last month occurred to an older model of Boeing 737 being operated by Southwest Airlines.

One million electric cars sold in the UK since 2002

LONDON (BBC): The UK registered its one millionth electric car last month, despite a big drop in sales, new figures suggest.

New EV registrations by private buyers fell by a quarter in January, threatening to undermine the UK's net zero promises.

Overall new car sales to private customers fell by 16% in the same period, the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders (SMMT) said.

The figures have sparked more calls for tax cuts to boost uptake among buyers. More than 20,000 battery electric cars (BEVs) were registered in January, up by a fifth year on year and helped by generous tax incentives for company car users. It means that since 2002, one million of these cars have reached the road. Fleet buyers - companies purchasing more than 25 units in one go - have been entirely behind the increase, with demand for BEVs growing by more than 40%.

Electric cars accounted for 14.7% of all new vehicles sold in the UK in January. Although that was an increase over the same month the year before, it was still well below the market share of 16.5% achieved for the whole of 2023. The lack of sales to private buyers has prompted calls from the SMMT for the government to halve VAT on electric vehicles, in order to boost demand.

"It's taken just over 20 years to reach our million EV milestone - but with the right policies, we can double down on that success in just another two," SMMT boss Mike Hawes said.

"Manufacturers have been asked to supply the vehicles, we now ask government to help consumers buy the vehicles on which net zero depends," he added. EVs have lower running costs than petrol and diesel vehicles, but the upfront price is around 30-40% higher, according to the motoring organisation.

Currently those buying an EV in the UK through a business, a company car or salary sacrifice scheme can benefit from generous tax incentives. Grants for individuals were phased out by the government in 2022.

Last year, Prime Minister Rishi Sunak confirmed a ban on new petrol and diesel car sales was being pushed back five years from 2030 to 2035.

The announcement was met with a mixed response from carmakers, many of whom have begun investing heavily in electric vehicle production.

Despite the delay in the ban, firms will still be forced to meet strict quotas for selling electric cars from January, ensuring that more than one in five cars sold are zero emission models. If not, they will face heavy fines. The target will go up each year until 2030. According to the latest SMMT figures, the overall new car market grew in January, pushed by a large increase in fleet sales, which were up by a third. This was despite a fall in overall registrations of new private cars last month, which fell by 16%.

The Bank of Punjab partners with Lahore Biennale Foundation underscored the importance of corporate collaboration in promoting the arts. The subsequent signing of the MOU between LBF and BOP solidified an institutional partnership for the next 3 editions of the Biennale. This marks a significant milestone in the collaborative efforts to enhance and celebrate the vibrant arts and cultural landscape of Pakistan.

Adding to the occasion's significance, Qudsia Rahim (Executive Director, LBF) shared her thoughts, stating that the Lahore Biennale Foundation adopts an inclusive and context-driven approach to achieve its projects and goals, challenging traditional critique methods and prevalent frameworks for curating, researching, and archiving material culture, built ecologies, and histories.

Russian oil getting into UK via refinery loophole, reports claim

LONDON (BBC): Millions of barrels of fuel made from Russian oil are still being imported to the UK despite sanctions imposed over the war in Ukraine, research claims.

A so-called "loophole" means Russian crude is refined in countries such as India and the products sold to the UK.

This is not illegal and does not breach the UK's Russian oil ban, but critics say it undermines sanctions aimed at restricting Russia's war funds.

The UK government denied there had been any imports of Russian oil since 2022. But a spokesman said internationally recognised "rules of origin" define that crude, once refined in another country, is classed for the purposes of trade as originating from the refining country. The UK is among many Western countries to ban the import of all oil and oil products that originate in Russia in a bid to hit the amount of cash Moscow can generate from fossil fuels.

But two separate reports, shared exclusively with the BBC, suggest the rules on refining enable products made from Russian crude oil to arrive on UK soil.

The Centre for Research on Energy and Clean Air (CREA) said this "refining loophole" meant countries such as India and China, who have not sanctioned the Kremlin, are able to legally import Russian crude and refine it into oil products such as jet fuel and diesel. They then export those products to the likes of the UK and the EU.

"The issue with this loophole is that it increases the demand for Russian crude and enables higher sales in terms of volume and pushing up their price as well, which increases the funds sent to the Kremlin's war chest," said Isaac Levi, head of CREA's Europe-Russia policy and energy analysis. In a separate research paper, campaign group Global Witness estimated that throughout 2023, some 5.2 million barrels of refined petroleum products that had been produced from Russian crude oil were imported to the UK.

Snap to lay off 'approximately' 10% of its staff

NEW YORK (BBC): Social media giant Snap, which operates Snapchat, has announced plans to cut "approximately" 10% of its staff. The firm said in November 2023 it had 5,000 employees, suggesting around 500 people are facing redundancy.

It comes a day before Snap reports its fourth-quarter results - having reported a net loss of $368m (£294m) in the previous quarter in October 2023. Snapchat said the move would "reduce hierarchy and promote in-person collaboration".

"We are focused on supporting our departing team members and we are very grateful for their hard work and many contributions to Snap," a spokesperson told the BBC.

According to its most recent annual report, more than 500 people work for the firm in the UK. It is unclear if any of the cuts will fall in the UK.

Jasmine Enberg, principle social media analyst at Insider Intelligence, told the BBC the layoffs "don't bode well for the state of Snap's business" ahead of its latest earnings announcement on Tuesday.

She pointed to rival Meta's latest results - which showed quarterly profits tripling year-on-year, a surge in users, lower costs and higher ad sales - as "a tough act for Snap to follow". "Snap is likely trying to garner some goodwill with investors, who rewarded its competitor for its cost-cutting measures and its continued 'do more with less' mantra going into 2024," Ms Enberg said.

She added that Snap's advertising revenues have been "slow to recover from the digital ad slowdown".

It is the second wave of mass redundancies from the social media company, which laid off about 20% of its workers in August 2022.

Snap has attempted to expand into products beyond Snapchat, including experimenting with augmented reality (AR) glasses, dubbed Spectacles.

But the firm has been unable to find a mass market for its other products, and it subsequently closed a division that offered AR services to business customers in 2023.

The latest job cuts come as companies, including Meta and Google, have been grappling with how to balance cost-cutting measures with the need to remain competitive.

According to layoffs.fyi, which tracks job losses in the tech sector, there were more than 232,000 job cuts in the industry in 2023.

Elsewhere, last week the firm's chief executive Evan Spiegel was grilled alongside the bosses of X (formerly Twitter), Meta, Discord and TikTok at a US Senate hearing about child safety online, where senators' attention mostly fell on Meta chief executive Mark Zuckerberg and TikTok boss Shou Zi Chew.

Mr Spiegel said in his opening testimony at the hearing that he and co-founder Bobby Murphy built Snapchat as an alternative to other social media platforms, where images shared were "permanent, public, and subject to popularity metrics". The redundancies were announced by the firm in a filing with the US Securities and Exchange Commission.

Snap said that the layoffs would affect staff globally, but did not specify who would be affected further.

Asia markets mixed as blockbuster US jobs batter rate cut hopes

HONG KONG (AFP/APP): Asian markets were mixed Monday after a forecast-busting US jobs report and comments by Federal Reserve boss Jerome Powell shattered any remaining hopes for a March interest rate cut.

Decision-makers left traders disappointed last week when they said after a meeting that they were unlikely to loosen policy at their next gathering.

There were still some rumblings of a change in view if the non-farm payroll data came in below expectations, but they were soon extinguished Friday by the highest reading in a year, while December's figure was ramped up.

The figures showed the labour market and world's biggest economy remained robust despite borrowing costs sitting at two-decade highs, giving little room to the Fed to cut even as inflation comes down.

That was followed by the airing Sunday of an interview with Powell in which he said the bank wanted to see more data.

The "danger of moving too soon is that the job's not quite done, and that the really good readings we've had for the last six months somehow turn out not to be a true indicator of where inflation's heading", he said according to a transcript from CBS. "The prudent thing to do is to... just give it some time and see that the data continue to confirm that inflation is moving down to two percent in a sustainable way," he said in the interview, which was conducted before the jobs report was released.

The chances of a March reduction plunged to 20 percent after the reading, down from around 40 percent Thursday, according to Bloomberg News. They had been about 80 percent at the start of the year.

"Initially, markets were anticipating six cuts starting in March," said Stephen Innes at SPI Asset Management. "However, Powell's recent remarks suggest such an early move was improbable. Combined with a robust January jobs report, hopes of an early spring adjustment have moved from improbable to impossible." And Yardeni Research President Ed Yardeni added that officials would likely continue to push back against market speculation for five cuts before the end of the year.

Still, Wall Street ended

Friday with more big gains for all three main indexes, pushing the S&P 500 to a fresh record thanks to a rally in tech giants Meta and Amazon in the wake of strong earnings. The advance in New York was fuelled by optimism that the economy is not likely to fall into recession, while rates are also still expected to come down.

Most of Asia struggled again, however, with Hong Kong and Shanghai extending a sell-off fuelled by growing concerns about the Chinese economy.

Investors were unmoved by pledges from officials Sunday to prevent wild fluctuations in stocks, with the China Securities Regulatory Commission vowing to guide more medium- and long-term funds into the market.

They provided few concrete plans, and observers said the move was unlikely to help turn sentiment around. "The statement sought to stabilise investor sentiment, but didn't touch on fundamental problems including a lack of confidence and huge economic uncertainty," Shen Meng, an investment bank Chanson & Co, said.

"Those issues are the causes of abnormal market fluctuation."

Observers, however, said the market may be about to bounce back after a long-running sell-off.

"Whether or not today marks the floor to Chinese equities is yet to be seen but it sure feels as though we're bumping along the bottom as policymakers have signalled they no longer want to see any further declines," said Invesco Asset Management's David Chao.

There were also losses in Sydney, Seoul, Singapore, Jakarta and Wellington.

Tokyo rose as the dollar rallied against the yen to boost exporters.

The greenback surged Friday in reaction to the jobs data, which ramped up Treasury yields on the prospect of interest rates staying higher for longer.

Mumbai, Manila and Bangkok edged up.

Tokyo - Nikkei 225: UP 0.5 percent at 36,354.16 (close)

Hong Kong - Hang Seng Index: DOWN 0.1 percent at 15,515.67

Shanghai - Composite: DOWN 1.0 percent at 2,702.18 (close)

Dollar/yen: UP at 148.32 yen from 148.30 yen on Friday

Goggia breaks leg in training

ROME (AFP): Italy's 2018 Olympic downhill champion Sofia Goggia suffered a broken leg in training, the Italian Winter Sports Federation (FISI) announced on Monday. FISI released a statement saying that scans on Monday revealed Goggia had a double fracture of her right tibia. She was due to undergo surgery later in the day in Milan. FISI had earlier said the skier "straddled a gate with her right leg in a right-hand turn" in training. "Turbo Goggia" also won the downhill Olympic silver in 2022 and is the reigning World Cup champion and leader in the discipline this season. She has 24 World Cup victories, six in super-G the rest in downhill, the most recent in Altenmarkt-Zauchensee, in Austria. This season has brought a string of serious injuries to top skiers. The women's circuit has already lost two reigning Olympic gold medalists -- Slovakia's slalom titleholder Petra Vlhova and Switzerland's downhill champion Corinne Suter both suffered season-ending knee injuries. On the men's side, French former overall World Cup champion Alexis Pinturault and Austrian slalom specialist Marco Schwarz were sidelined due to knee injuries. Norway's 2020 overall World Cup winner, Norwegian Aleksander Aamodt Kilde sustained a deep cut to his shin in a crash.

MILAN (AFP/APP): Inter Milan took firm control of the Serie A title race by winning Sunday's highly-anticipated clash with Juventus 1-0 and moving four points clear of their closest rivals for the Scudetto. Sri Lanka celebrate 10-wicket Test win against Afghanistan

COLOMBO (AFP): Sri Lanka won their one-off Test match against Afghanistan by 10 wickets with a day to spare, with their opening batsmen chasing down an easy target of 56 in Colombo Monday. Afghanistan were bowled out for 296 in their second innings, setting Sri Lanka the low goal, with Dimuth Karunaratne (32 not out) and Nishan Madushka (22 not out) finishing the job within 7.2 overs.

his team stuck to their plan. "When both Angelo (Mathews) and I got dismissed, it might not seem that bad but that was the point that Afghanistan felt they were back in the game," he said. "I think that was the crucial moment of the match. But our bowlers stuck to the plan all day (day 3), not giving runs away and keeping it tight." Prabath Jayasuriya finished with his seventh five-wicket haul in Test cricket.

"I'm really happy at the moment, the last couple of days were tough," said Jayasuriya, named man of the match. "We knew this was a batting-friendly wicket, so we were just trying to do the basics right." Afghanistan were looking good to stretch the game to the final day when they resumed on day four at 199 for one in their second innings. "Lack of experience" However, six wickets fell in the morning session for just 52 runs as the second new ball hurt the Afghans. Seamer Kasun Rajitha dismissed overnight batsman Rahmat for 54 and then left-arm spinner Jayasuriya ran through the middle order as the new ball offered him bounce and turn. Jayasuriya used his arm ball -- which goes straight on -- to good effect, foxing batsmen who were playing for turn. Zadrán, who had batted for more than six hours for his hundred, was confused by one such delivery, and was bowled through the gate. Jayasuriya finished with five for 107, while seamers Asitha Fernando and Kasun Rajitha shared five wickets between them. Jayasuriya ended the game with eight wickets, having taken three in the first innings. Despite the loss, Afghanistan's fast bowlers were impressive, with Naveed Zadrán picking up four wickets in Sri Lanka's first innings on his debut. Hundreds by former captains Mathews and Dinesh Chandimal helped Sri Lanka to their first-innings total of 439. The pair were involved in a record 232-run stand for the fourth wicket, the highest-scoring partnership at Colombo's Sinhalese Sports Club for that wicket. Afghanistan captain Hashmatullah Shahidi said he was disappointed because they lost the game despite managing a "good comeback". "I think it's the lack of experience in Test cricket and also not having a lot of opportunities to play red-ball cricket," Shahidi said. "We're new in Test cricket and it's a learning process for us. I hope that we learn from this game." The match was not part of the World Test Championship. The teams will now move to Kandy for a three-match ODI series, followed by three T20 Internationals in Dambulla.

Bumrah stars as India down England to level Test series

VISAKHAPATNAM (AFP): Fast bowler Jasprit Bumrah took a match haul of nine wickets to lead India's 106-run win over England in the second Test on Monday and level the five-match series.

Chasing a record 399 for victory, England were bowled out for 292 in the second session on day four in Visakhapatnam, despite an attacking start and Zak Crawley's 73. Bumrah and spinner Ravichandran Ashwin, who ended the match on 499 Test wickets, took three each in the final innings and the pace spearhead bowled Tom Hartley to seal the win.

Shubman Gill set up the comeback victory for the hosts with his 104 on day three to set England, who won the opening Test, a daunting target. Yashasvi Jaiswal had made an impact with his 209 in India's first innings of 396 after they elected to bat.

England came out swinging with their "Bazball" brand of cricket, Crawley and company hitting boundaries despite losing wickets. "The way we have gone about taking on challenges like that is what we are about," said skipper Ben Stokes.

"In moments like that, when you have scoreboard pressure, that is when we get the best out of ourselves as individuals. "The way we applied ourselves and put India under pressure was great, unfortunately we didn't end up on the right side of the result."

He said a virus had hit the team Monday morning with a couple of players waking up sick but did not offer that as an "excuse" for the loss. India's left-arm spinner Axar Patel got a key breakthrough when he trapped Rehan Ahmed lbw for 23 after the nightwatchman hit five fours in his 31-ball knock.

Ollie Pope hammered five boundaries in his brief stay at the wicket before Ashwin had him caught at slip on 23. Joe Root showed no signs of the finger injury that kept him out of the field for much of Sunday as he reverse-swept for two fours. But he fell for 16 while attempting a slog off Ashwin, who remains one away from entering the 500-wicket club.

The chase soon lost steam with two wickets in five balls before lunch, including Crawley out lbw off left-arm wrist spinner Kuldeep Yadav. The lbw appeal was turned down by the on-field umpire but India successfully reviewed the call. Jonny Bairstow followed just four balls later, with England at 194-6.

Stokes attempted to get the chase back on track after lunch but a direct hit by Shreyas Iyer had the left-hander run out on 11 while eyeing a quick single.

Wicketkeeper-batsman Ben Foakes (36) and the left-handed Hartley (also 36) put on a stubborn stand of 55 but Bumrah, named player of the match, broke through to get Foakes caught and bowled. The Three Lions nevertheless stuck to their fearless style, which has got them 14 wins in 20 matches under coach Brendon McCullum, nicknamed "Baz", and Stokes.

Bumrah played a key role with his six wickets in England's first-innings total of 253 as the tourists conceded a crucial lead of 143.

"He's a champion player for us, he has done the job for us for a while," said Indian skipper Rohit Sharma. "When you win a game like that you have to look at the overall performance. We know that winning a Test match in these conditions is not going to be easy, the bowlers stepped up."

Veteran England pace bowler James Anderson finished with a match haul of five wickets to take his tally to 695 in a glittering Test career, which began in 2003. The third Test starts February 15 in Rajkot and the teams will take a break beforehand, with England expected to fly to the United Arab Emirates for the week.

Jasprit Bumrah celebrates after taking the final wicket.

Use of drugs by athletes harmful for their health: Shahid Islam

PESHAWAR (APP): Deputy Director General (Technical) Shahid Islam Monday said that the use of drugs by athletes to enhance their overall performance through drugs are harmful to general health and for this purpose, the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) is playing a key role in restricting the athletes.

WADA's primary role is to develop, harmonize and coordinate anti-doping rules and policies across all sports and countries, Shahid Islam said in his lecture as course conductor in the five-day PSB Coaching and Training Course which concluded here.

A total of 85 male and female athletes including coaches, trainers and instructors attended the course wherein Rana Nasrullah, Dr. Nabeel and international football coach Asad Ullah supervised the course with their valuable lectures.

The World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA), he said, was established on November 10, 1999.

Its mission is to promote and coordinate the fight against doping in sports internationally. Thanks to this independent agency, the Olympic Movement and public authorities worldwide can intensify their efforts to banish drugs from sports, he added.

Shahid Islam said that on the special instruction of the Director General PSB, they have started their season coaching and training courses from Peshawar, followed by organizing in other cities as well in order to train and coach upcoming coaches, trainers and instructors so that to improve the overall standard of sports in Pakistan.

PSB Refreshes Course also included a vital topic on Anti-Doping Awareness conducted by Shahid Islam. Anti-Doping Awareness also underlined the need to enhance speed and endorsement through biomechanics of the human body.

Shahid Islam said that soon after joining as DG Shoaib Khoso, he has directed all the centers across Pakistan to host different courses related to Athletes and Games to ensure the provision of first-hand and much-updated information to youngsters who are part of various Games. Shahid Islam said that tackling doping issues with an iron hand to save the country's reputation awareness is a key for the athletes. He said the lack of awareness of the athletes also led to such use of banned drugs. He said drugs and anti-doping in Sports should be thoroughly checked with the aim of protecting the overall image of the athlete and the country. About the definitions of doping, Shahid Islam said that doping is defined as the presence of prohibited substances or methods to unfairly improve sporting performance and to gain an advantage over competitors. He said doping is now a global problem that follows international sporting events worldwide. International sports federations, led by the International Olympic Committee, have for the past half-century attempted to stop the spread of this problem, with little effect. Nasrullah Rana in his two-hour long lecture on the need to develop speed, stamina and the role of good coaches and knowledgeable coaches. He said the recognition, trust, respect or awareness of the coaches among athletes is only based on knowledge. He said, sports coaches assist athletes in developing to their full potential. FIFA unveils schedule for World Cup 2026

NEW YORK (Agencies): The Federation Internationale de Football Association (FIFA) announced the schedule of the 2026 Men's Football World Cup during a live broadcast at the Telemundo Center in Miami on Sunday.

The 2026 World Cup final will be held at MetLife Stadium in New York/New Jersey, organisers FIFA announced on Sunday. The New York bid held off a strong challenge from Dallas to secure the July 19 game, the culmination of the expanded 48-team tournament being co-hosted by the USA, Canada and Mexico.

The competition will kick off with the opening game at Mexico City's iconic Azteca Stadium on June 11.

"The most inclusive and impactful FIFA World Cup ever is no longer a dream but a reality that will take shape in the form of 104 matches in 16 state-of-the-art stadiums across Canada, Mexico and the USA," said FIFA president Gianni Infantino.

"From the opening match at the iconic Estadio Azteca to the spectacular final in New York New Jersey, players and fans have been at the core of our extensive planning for this game-changing tournament... that will not only set new records but also leave an indelible legacy."

Atlanta and Dallas will host the semi-finals while the third-place game will be played in Miami.

The quarter-final games will take place in Los Angeles, Kansas City, Miami and Boston. A total of 16 cities across the three countries will host games with the bulk of the matches being held in the USA.

The 1994 World Cup was also held in the United States and the final took place at the Rose Bowl in Pasadena, near Los Angeles. New York hosted games at that tournament at the old Giants Stadium, which was later demolished to make way for MetLife, which opened in 2010.

The decisions were announced on a live television broadcast in North America that featured Infantino alongside comedian and actor Kevin Hart, rapper Drake and celebrity Kim Kardashian. The 82,500-seat MetLife Stadium, across the Hudson River from New York in East Rutherford, New Jersey, is the home of the NFL's New York Giants and New York Jets but has held a number of international football games, including the final of the 2016 Copa America tournament.

The New York bid had lobbied hard on the city's experience at hosting major international events and its position as a global city with easy transportation connections for fans. Dallas had hoped that AT&T Stadium, in Arlington, Texas, home to the NFL's Dallas Cowboys, would benefit from having a roof to protect the game from the elements.

There is some compensation for Dallas with the venue being given nine total games -- the most of any venue.

Los Angeles had also thrown a hat into the ring but the attempt struggled amid disagreements with FIFA about tournament upgrades needed to NFL venue SoFi Stadium. The Azteca will become the first stadium to host World Cup tournament games in three separate editions after 1970 and 1986.

The venue hosted the finals of the 1970 and 1986 tournaments. The World Cup will take place during celebrations of the 250th anniversary of American independence.

A round-of-16 game will be held on July 4, Independence Day, in Philadelphia, where the US Declaration of Independence was signed.

The United States will kick off group stage competition at SoFi Stadium in Los Angeles on June 12 and will also play in Seattle. Toronto was selected to host the first game for the Canadian team. Vancouver is the other Canadian venue which will host the squad.

The expansion of the tournament to 48 teams from 32 means there will be an additional 24 matches, making up a total of 104 games across the 16 venues.

The tournament will take the format of 12 groups of four teams with the top two going through along with the eight best third-placed teams.

From there, the competition is a straight knock-out format with the finalists having to play eight games rather than the previous seven. FIFA says the match schedule, which will not be complete until the qualification process has ended, has been designed to limit travel for the teams.

The full draw for the tournament is expected to be held in late 2025. Group fixtures have been designed to avoid cross-coast travel for the teams, who will also be able to choose from team bases in their group's region.

The 16 host cities for the FIFA World Cup are: Atlanta, Boston, Dallas, Guadalajara, Houston, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Mexico City, Miami, Monterrey, New York-New Jersey, Philadelphia, San Francisco Bay Area, Seattle, Toronto and Vancouver.

Talking to a private news channel, she said that India cannot wipe the eternal love for Pakistan away from Kashmiris' hearts, adding, Modi-led government can not suppress Kashmiris' legitimate struggle by the dint of force.

There will be no dialogue with India until it reverts its decision of abrogating article 370 and 35-A in Jammu and Kashmir, she said, adding, dialogue must be resumed from the point where it was stopped.

She criticized that Modi-led government agreed to a peaceful talk with Pakistan on every issue but unfortunately they formally denied Pakistan's proposal to hold exclusive talks on the Kashmir issue.

However, it is clear that if India will not agree to hold a peaceful talk with Pakistan on Kashmir issue seriously, we will not be hostages at the hands of Indian government, she added.

IBHARI launches 'Gender Apartheid' Investigation in Afghanistan and Iran

Hakim Bigzaam The International Bar Association's Human Rights Institute (IBAHRI) reports that, in coordination with several members of the British Parliament, it has launched an investigation into the situation of women in Afghanistan and Iran. The IBAHRI currently has this issue under scrutiny. While international law does not explicitly criminalize "gender apartheid," the IBAHRI states on its website that what women in Afghanistan and Iran experience qualifies as "gender apartheid." According to the institute, women lawyers, politicians, scholars, and human rights defenders in Afghanistan and Iran, along with international activists and experts, are demanding the recognition of the status of women and girls in both countries as a form of gender apartheid. The institute's website highlights that women in Afghanistan and Iran are at a stage of societal exclusion, and an examination of their situation as "gender apartheid" is deemed essential. It should be noted that United Nations experts have referred to the restrictions imposed on women's lives in Afghanistan as "sexual harassment." However, Richard Bennett, the UN Human Rights Rapporteur on Afghanistan, stated in his April report that what women in this country endure could be reconsidered as an instance of gender apartheid. Richard Goldstone, a retired judge from the Constitutional Court of South Africa, stated: "In South Africa, systematic discrimination against the majority of its population based on race was practised. That was apartheid. Therefore, in Afghanistan and Iran, systematic discrimination against all women and girls is practised." Mr. Goldstone added that the recognition of gender apartheid in international law is considered essential. In Iran, women do not have free choice in selecting their fields of study, while in Afghanistan, educating and teaching girls is prohibited. In the former, women are banned from working, entering public places such as parks and restaurants, and traveling under the rule of the Taliban regime. Khaama Press

United Nations experts have referred to the restrictions imposed on women's lives in Afghanistan as "sexual harassment." However, Richard Bennett, the UN Human Rights Rapporteur on Afghanistan, stated in his April report that what women in this country endure could be reconsidered as an instance of gender apartheid. Richard Goldstone, a retired judge from the Constitutional Court of South Africa, stated: "In South Africa, systematic discrimination against the majority of its population based on race was practised. That was apartheid. Therefore, in Afghanistan and Iran, systematic discrimination against all women and girls is practised." Mr. Goldstone added that the recognition of gender apartheid in international law is considered essential. In Iran, women do not have free choice in selecting their fields of study, while in Afghanistan, educating and teaching girls is prohibited. In the former, women are banned from working, entering public places such as parks and restaurants, and traveling under the rule of the Taliban regime. Khaama Press

Bilawal holds rally in Karachi

F.P. Report

KARACHI: Chairman Pakistan People's Party (PPP) Bilawal Bhutto Zardari has said that he is the son of Karachi and if the people give him a chance on February 8, he will change the landscape of the metropolis through public service and development.

He urged the Karachiites to reject those elements selling mixture of hatred and division, who forget Karachi every time they become part of the federal government by bargaining on the rights of the city.

According to the press release issued by Media Cell Bilawal House, the PPP chairman is leading a grand rally in 'Quaid's City' in connection with his nationwide election campaign, which started from Bilawal House Chowranghi Karachi. The rally passed through Shirin Jinnah Colony, Tara Chand Road, Kemari, Machhi Miani and Khara Dar and reached Chakiwara Lyari, from where it will reach Malir via different parts of the city, while its final destination will be Dawood Chowranghi.

Bilawal Bhutto Zardari, while addressing different places, said that he has campaigned in every area of the four provinces, but Karachi is different in this regard. "Karachi is my own city. Not only was I born here, Shaheed Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto was also born in the same city of Karachi. When I say that I want to serve Karachi, (and) play my role in the development of Karachi, then (that means) I want to take care of my own home," he added.

Pakistan People's Party thanked Karachiites for their support to his party in the recent local body elections, saying: "I am thankful to the people of Karachi for trusting me and not only winning from Kemari, but also from the entire city and electing a Jiyala mayor for the first time in history." He further said that even on February 8, the people of Karachi should trust him and make the PPP candidates successful. "This will be the first time in history, not only will the local government system be in my hands, Insha Allah the provincial government will also be in my hands, and if you are with me, the federal government will

PML-N to rebuild Pakistan again: Nawaz

F.P. Report

MURREE: Supreme leader of Pakistan Muslim League (PML-N), Nawaz Sharif has pledged that his party after coming into power will start a train service from Islamabad to Murree and Muzaffarabad.

While addressing a public gathering in Murree on Monday, the former prime minister claimed that PML-N enjoys complete support of youth of the country. Regarding Kashmir Solidarity Day, he said Pakistan has always stood by the people of Indian illegally Occupied Jammu and Kashmir (IIOJK).

Nawaz Sharif taking jibe at Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) said that it neither fulfilled its promise nor did anything for Pakistan but PML-N will rebuild Pakistan again. Earlier in his Gujranwala Public gathering, the PML-N supremo pledged to eliminate poverty and unemployment in the country if he secures victory in the upcoming Feb 8 general elections.

If PML-N government had not been ousted, not a single person here would have been unemployed, he claimed. Nawaz Sharif while citing Transparency International's report said Pakistan's ranking on graft index improved under Nawaz Sharif-led government. "Not only corruption, the price of bread, flour and sugar were also at the lowest", he reiterated.

He further said that the judge, who was in line to become new Chief Justice and awarded him sentence, resigned and went home. "That judge was involved in my ouster," he added. "Had my government remained, people would have been satisfied; they would have been able to make ends meet, unlike today," the PML-N supremo maintained.

With only two days left before the upcoming elections and political parties trying their best to woo the masses, Pakistan Muslim League-Nawaz (PML-N) senior vice-president Maryam Nawaz has promised the "highest development" if the party is voted into power. "[We] promise the highest development in Murree if the city chooses lion," Maryam said while addressing a political gathering in Murree on Monday.

Her remarks come as most of the major political parties, including the PML-N, have promised their election campaigns on socio-economic uplift amid the prevailing dire economic indicators driven by a weakening local currency, depleting foreign exchange reserves and other factors.

also be in my hands," he told the charged crowd.

He said that if the people vote for the PPP candidates contesting on 20 seats of Karachi, then he will transform the city through dedicated public service and development in the next five years. "Other parties are contesting elections for their own interests. I am contesting elections for the rights of the people," he pointed out.

Chairman Bilawal Bhutto Zardari said that the people should also compare the other parties which are contesting against the PPP in the general elections. "These parties are doing politics of hatred and division, selling some Churan (mixture) or the other," he said, adding that someone is trying to divide Karachi on the basis of religion, some language and some communalism. "On February 8, you (people) should stamp the Arrow (symbol on ballot paper) and answer these forces that this is the Karachi of all of us. We will not allow anyone to try to divide on the basis of hatred. This city has made many sacrifices because of the politics of violence, they are part of history," he added.

The PPP chairman said that in the February 8 general elections, the real contest is between only two parties, saying: "One is the party with the Tiger symbol and the other is your city's party with the Teer." He urged the people to reject those indulging in politics of hatred and division as well as not to support independent candidates, as the move would amount to wasting their votes. "Karachi Walo (People of Karachi)! Give me a chance this time, you give your brother a chance. I will not disappoint you. I want to undertake (development) work in Karachi's every nook and corner. If you want to solve the problems facing the metropolis, then once you have to support the PPP," he urged.

He said that Karachi's votes were robbed in the past, but now people will not allow anyone to steal their mandate. Bilawal Bhutto Zardari once again appealed to the public to come up with full support for the PPP candidates in February 8 polls. He also took an oath from his party candidates that they would serve the people without any discrimination after winning the election.

Israel's 'chilling disregard' for life in Gaza

WEST BANK: Israel has unleashed unlawful lethal force against Palestinians in the occupied West Bank, carrying out unlawful killings and displaying "a chilling disregard for Palestinian lives", Amnesty International says.

The human rights organisation said in a report released on Monday that Israel's actions in the territory have intensified during its war on Gaza and its military and other bodies are committing numerous illegal acts of violence that amount to clear violations of international law. The world's eyes are mostly on the Gaza Strip, where the Israeli military has killed more than 27,000 Palestinians, mostly women and children, since the start of the war on October 7. But Israeli forces are also carrying out unlawful killings in occupied Palestinian territories, Amnesty said in the report.

The document was compiled with remote interviews with witnesses, first responders and local residents as well as verified videos and photos. "Under the cover of the relentless bombardment and atrocity crimes in Gaza, Israeli forces have unleashed unlawful lethal force against Palestinians in the occupied West Bank, carrying out unlawful killings and displaying a chilling disregard for Palestinian lives," said Erika Guevara-Rosas, Amnesty International's director of global research, advocacy and policy.

"These unlawful killings are in blatant violation of international human rights law and are committed with impunity in the context of maintaining Israel's institutionalized regime of systematic oppression and domination over Palestinians." — Arab News

Blinken arrives in Riyadh

RIYADH (AFP): US Secretary of State Antony Blinken arrived in Riyadh on Monday, on the first stop of his fifth regional tour since the beginning of the Israel-Gaza war. He is expected to meet with senior Saudi officials and discuss the situation in Gaza. Blinken is later expected to visit Israel, Egypt and Qatar.

Ahead of the trip he stressed the need for "urgently addressing humanitarian needs in Gaza," after aid groups have repeatedly sounded the alarm over the devastating impact nearly four months of war have had on the besieged territory. The health ministry in Hamas-run Gaza said at least 27,478 people have been killed in the territory in nearly four months of war between Palestinian militants and Israel. A ministry statement said 66,835 people have been wounded since fighting erupted on Oct. 7.

Meanwhile, after a week-end of retaliatory strikes, the United States warned Iran and the militias it arms and funds that it will conduct more attacks if American forces in the Mideast continue to be targeted, but that it does not want an "open-ended military campaign" across the region. "We are prepared to deal with anything that any group or any country tries to come at us with," said Jake Sullivan, President Joe Biden's national security adviser. Sullivan said Iran should expect "a swift and forceful response" if it — and not one of its proxies — "chose to respond directly" against the US.

No guidelines to shut down internet on election day

ISLAMABAD (APP): Caretaker Federal Minister for Information, Broadcasting and Parliamentary Affairs Murtaza Solangi on Monday said that the government had not issued any guideline to shut down internet and mobile signals on the day of general election.

Speaking in a private news channel programme, the minister said that the local administrations had the authority to decide about shutting down internet in a specific area if it faced any law and order issue. He said there was no doubt that an extraordinary situation required extraordinary measures, however, so far no such a situation had been reported in any area.

Highlighting the government's measures to curb fake news and propaganda on social media, the minister said the relevant institutions had been issuing clarification to rebut any such news circulating in different media. "Security is a serious issue," he said, while pointing out a steep rise in activities of different terrorist groups in the country, especially after the establishment an interim government in Kabul.

"Last year alone, around 1,500 incidents of terrorism were reported in the country," Murtaza Solangi noted. Police cops were martyred in a terrorist attack on a police station in the Dera Ismail Khan, he said, adding such acts had failed to affect the resolve of law enforcement agencies fighting terrorism in the country.

He noted that recently, 24 terrorists were killed in Mach area of Balochistan. The minister ruled out any delay in the elections which were scheduled for February 8. The history of Pakistan suggested that the elections were held in harsh and difficult conditions. To a query, he said the Kashmir dispute was a long-standing issue on the agenda of the United Nations Security Council.

He recalled that some 75 years ago, the then Indian prime minister promised in the United Nations Security Council that the Kashmiri people would be given their right to self-determination so that they could

Media helpline launched for redressal of journalists' complaints: Solangi

F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: Caretaker Federal Minister for Information, Broadcasting and Parliamentary Affairs Murtaza Solangi said on Monday that the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting (MOIB) was launching the media helpline to redress the complaints of both local and foreign journalists during elections.

Addressing the helpline's launching ceremony, he said in the present era of digital media it was imperative to upgrade and improve working. The media-complaint application would accessible through any browser to both local and international journalists and media-persons covering the general election 2024, he added. The minister said that the caretaker government, which was formed under Article 224 of the Constitution, helped the Election Commission of Pakistan in every way to ensure a free and transparent election within the timeframe announced by the latter.

decide their own destiny. "On August 5, 2019, India changed the status of Kashmir by taking unilateral and illegal actions," he said while regretting that the Indian government deprived the Kashmiris of their rights by abolishing Article 370 of the Indian Constitution. He said the government and the people of Pakistan would continue to extend their moral, legal and diplomatic support to the people of Kashmir.

To another query, the minister clarified that the caretaker government had no favourites in the elections and the statement of the Pakistan Peoples Party chairman in that regard was "unfortunate". The minister reiterated that the caretaker government was ensuring a level-playing field for all the political parties and the state media was giving due coverage to all of them. Solangi said all-out efforts were being made to ensure equal treatment to all the political parties, but ironically "complaining is part of Pakistan's political culture".

The PML-N had complaints of an uneven playing field in Sindh, while the PPP in Punjab and Maulana Fazlur Rehman in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, he said, adding that the matter of level-playing field was being politicized for political gains. He believed that the people of Pakistan would come out on the election day in a large number to elect the parties of their choice. To another query, he said there had been a significant increase in the number of registered voters for the general elections 2024. The number of women voters alone was increased by 2 million, he added.

The proportion of the submission and acceptance of nomination papers for the elections 2024 was higher than the previous ones, he noted. A helpline, he said, had been established for quick redressal of the complaints of local and foreign journalists and observers. The minister urged the citizens to express their love for the country by exercising their right to vote on the election day. "It is clearly written in the preamble of the Constitution that the country will be run by its elected representatives," he said while regretting a persistent propaganda about the election delay.

The caretaker government from the very beginning held a stance that the elections would be conducted on time, he added. The minister said the caretaker government would stand dissolved following the election of the Leader of House in the National Assembly and oath-taking of the newly elected prime minister. To another query, Solangi said the caretaker government would pass on a "handover note" to the next elected government about its achievements and failures.

Controversy after US adult performer visits Iran

TEHRAN: An adult performer from the United States has stirred controversy after visiting Iran and going to the former US embassy in Tehran. Whitney Wright, 32, from Oklahoma arrived in Iran last week, and confirmed on her social media on Monday that she has left the country.

She posted several pictures of her visit, including one that went viral that showed her — in a headscarf and unrevealing clothing required in Iran — standing next to a lowered US flag at the site of the country's former embassy. Iranian authorities have said the embassy was a "den of espionage" before its takeover in the aftermath of the 1979 Iranian Revolution and have since turned it into a museum. It is where embassy staff were held for 444 days, exacerbating hostilities that reverberate across Iran-US relations even now.

Wright wrote on her Instagram account that she was eager to visit the embassy along with other museums in Tehran and suggested the backlash and negative attention online she has received are extreme. "I'm sharing exhibits from a museum that are never seen," Wright wrote on Instagram. "It's not an endorsement of the government."

Some critics alleged that her visit highlights inconsistencies from the Iranian authorities. Wright's profession is considered "obscene" by Iranian authorities and could in theory lead to criminal charges. Her visit came after Iran in 2022 and early 2023 saw some of the largest public protests and unrest since the 1979 revolution, triggered by the death of Mahsa Amini.

The 22-year-old died in the custody of Iran's morality police after being detained for alleged non-compliance with the mandatory hijab, which has been in force since shortly after the revolution. The issues of being required to wear hijab by law and women's freedom were at the centre of a lot of the protests. Iranian authorities have also engaged in a variety of efforts to enforce the hijab rules since the protests have died down.

Actor Setareh Pesiiani referred to Wright's visit to criticise the government's mandatory headscarf policy. "You punish people of this country in various methods for removal of hijab but you allow a porn actress to come here to tour Iran!?" Pesiiani wrote on Instagram. — Aab News

He said the Afghan refugees lived in Pakistan for decades, and used the health and education services and the infrastructure of Pakistan and their businessmen earned billions of dollars through the Afghan transit trade.

The prime minister asserted that Pakistan wanted a friendly government in Afghanistan as was the desire of other countries in the region. He was of the view that the government of Taliban was formed in Afghanistan after the world squandered its opportunities despite spending $ 2 trillion.

He said the Taliban forcefully took over the government as the United States and NATO abandoned Afghanistan. To a

He said in Balochistan, armed insurgents were masquerading as civil society and speaking the language of human rights for achieving a certain goal. Those elements never belonged to a mainstream political party but were part of the proscribed organizations in the province, he observed.

Those people who send remittances from abroad were assets of Pakistan and they were contributing to its economic growth, he remarked. He opined that there were many people who wanted to return to Pakistan after living their lives in Europe and North America. In future, more people will return to Pakistan because of their Islamic roots and attachment to eastern values, he observed.
