F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: Prime Minister Shehbaz Sharif on Tuesday reiterating his government's strong commitment to youth empowerment, called for fostering partnership, supporting entrepreneurship and prioritizing youth's education and skill development to pave the way to a resilient Commonwealth and a prosperous future.

"By ensuring that youth remain central to governance and decision-making processes, we can lead the way in fostering partnerships, supporting entrepreneurship, and prioritizing education and skills development. This will ensure that our future is in the hands of an empowered young generation," the prime minister said addressing the inaugural session of the Commonwealth Asia Youth Alliance summit here. The opening session of the international summit was attended by the delegates from 12 countries, federal ministers, diplomats, 113 new members of National Youth Council, students and academicians from across the country. A fresh program had been launched for laptop distribution to high achievers from Balochistan, Gilgit-Baltistan (GB), and AJK, coming from humble financial backgrounds, he added. Urging the youth for dedicated efforts and contribution to nation-building, he advised, "Dream boldly, act courageously, work tirelessly, and have faith and spirit of conviction. Senate approves PECA amends bill

ISLAMABAD: The Senate on Tuesday passed controversial amendments to the Prevention of Electronic Crimes Act (Peca) Bill, 2025, amid a walkout by journalists from the press gallery and protests by the opposition.

The amendments adds Section 26(A) to Peca, which seeks to penalise perpetrators of "fake news" online. It says anyone who intentionally spreads, displays, or transmits false information likely to cause fear, panic, or unrest in society may face up to three years' imprisonment, a fine of up to Rs2 million, or both. The bill now awaits the president's assent to become law.

The bill was moved by Minister for Industries and Production Rana Tanveer Hussain on behalf of Interior Minister Mohsin Naqvi. As the bill was introduced, Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, Shibli Faraz, spoke out against it, highlighting that the laws were made to protect people, while the purpose of said bill was "to target a specific political party".

"When a new law is introduced, its intent is scrutinised. Whether it's social media or any other medium, it should operate within specific boundaries," Faraz said. "The purpose of this bill is to target a specific political party." He added: "Laws are made to protect people, not to oppress them. It takes time to craft a law properly."

Faraz appeared to be referring to the manner in which the National Assembly rushed the contentious amendments to Peca last week, which drew opposition protests and triggered a walkout by journalists. PPP members had voiced their support during the voting. Meanwhile, Federal Minister Rana Tanveer Hussain replied to the senator after the bill was passed, saying that the bill was neither set in stone, nor was it aimed at journalists. "This law will not deal with TV newscasters but social media," he said, adding that it also "can be improved".

"Journalists have nothing to do with this bill," he added. According to the report issued by the Senate Standing Committee on Interior, the bill "primarily seeks to modernise ... the legislative framework for combating cybercrimes in Pakistan", while the interior secretary emphasised that the bill was written in good faith and aimed to "protect the general public ... and to make the in-field act more effective to protect people's rights". After the committee's approval, now only the senators have to vote for the bill to be sent to the president who would sign it into law.

In Section 26A of the amended law, the term has been explained as any information disseminated by a person that "he knows or has reason to believe to be false or fake and likely to cause or create a sense of fear, panic or disorder or unrest in general public or society". Separately, the National Assembly had also passed "The Digital Nation Pakistan Bill, 2024" which was moved by Minister of State for Information Technology and Telecommunication Shaza Fatima Khawaja.

The bill aims to create a digital identity for citizens — to centralise social, economic and governance data — and to provide for the transformation of Pakistan into a digital nation, enabling a digital society, digital economy and digital governance. Meanwhile, a press release by the Pakistan Federal Union of Journalists (PFUJ) announced a nationwide protest today at 3pm.

"We had appealed to the government of Pakistan and elected representatives to consult all stakeholders before passing the amendments from Senate of Pakistan... We reject these amendments, as they go against the spirit of the Constitution. "Therefore, the PFUJ urges and appeals all union of journalists to organise strong protests at 3pm tomorrow at their respective press clubs, demonstrating unity and sending a strong message of rejection to the government and authorities behind these amendments," the press release said.

Govt to challenge Justice Mansoor's verdict

F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: The federal government has decided to challenge Supreme Court (SC) judge Justice Mansoor Ali Shah's verdict in the contempt of court case against the apex court's Additional Registrar Nazir Abbas.

During the hearing of the case related to the Customs Act on Tuesday, Attorney-General for Pakistan (AGP) Mansoor Usman Awan informed the constitutional bench of the SC about the government's decision. "We have decided to file an appeal against the decision."

The SC had on Monday disposed of the contempt of court case against the additional registrar and referred the matter of determining the powers of constitutional and regular benches to the chief justice of Pakistan (CJP) for the formation of a full court. According to media reports, Justice Mansoor Ali Shah, while announcing the reserved verdict, withdrew contempt proceedings against the additional registrar (judicial) for not fixing a case regarding the jurisdiction of regular benches.

The case, reserved for the judgment on January 23, centered round the additional registrar's failure to schedule a matter regarding the jurisdiction of constitutional and regular benches, rather it was transferred to the constitutional bench for further hearing.

The case was originally heard by a two-member bench comprising Justice Mansoor Ali Shah and Justice Aqeel Ahmed Abbasi. During the hearing, Justice Mansoor Ali Shah noted that the bench deliberated on two questions — one about delisting cases and the other about invalidating a court order through an administrative order.

The SC judge remarked, "The court did not find any such proof that showed that the additional registrar (judicial) had any personal interest in the case." Noting that neither was any evidence found of any "ill-intent" of the SC official, the senior judge announced the withdrawal of the show-cause notice on the contempt of court against Abbas.

Talking to media after the meeting, Raja said the meeting was held on the instructions of the founder to protect the constitution and said the PTI was also ready to talk to all political leaders for the rule of law and constitution.

Raja said all democratic forces have to come together and the maunala also promised to hold more meetings. He said there was no chance of talks with the government now. On the occasion, Opposition leader in the National Assembly Omar Ayub said the delegation has come for democracy while mentioning that he still had not been allowed to meet the PTI founder.

Ayub said that the demand for the release of prisoners and a judicial commission was in the dialogue sessions but the government showed no response. JUIF leader Kamran Murtaza said the contacts that were stopped with PTI had restarted. He said that a two-member committee has been formed to take matters forward.

Dialogue in doldrums as PTI committee stays away

F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: National Assembly Speaker Ayaz Sadiq on Tuesday postponed the fourth round of negotiations between the government and the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) due to absence of the opposition party representatives.

Earlier, the speaker reached out to PTI leaders Omar Ayub and Asad Qaiser over telephone, inviting them to participate in the negotiations. However, Omar Ayub declined the invitation, stating that negotiations could not proceed until a judicial commission was formed.

PTI Chairman Barrister Gohar categorically announced a few days earlier that the PTI was no more part of the dialogue as Imran Khan had refused to proceed further over government's failure to form a judicial commission to investigate May 9 and Nov 26 incidents.

Ayaz Sadiq, on behalf of the government, still summoned the fourth sitting despite reservations by the PTI. The NA speaker briefly spoke and said the government believed in dialogue and expected that the PTI representatives would join them to carry the talks forward. He said political matters should be solved through dialogues and there were no preconditions in such matters. He said the government side expected that the PTI would reconsider its move and join the dialogue process therefore, it was not disbanding the committee for now. Regretting the government's failure to constitute judicial commissions within the seven-day deadline, Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) Chairman Gohar Ali Khan clarified on Tuesday that his party was not holding dialogue with any other quarter.

"It's unfortunate that talks could not proceed further. We sat with the government with an open heart. Our demand was that the judicial commission should be announced within seven days," Gohar said talking to media outside the Adiala jail in Rawalpindi. He said the negotiations would have moved forward, had judicial commissions been formed.

The PTI and the ruling coalition have been engaged in talks aimed at defusing political tensions in the country for nearly a month. Both sides have held three rounds of talks so far. However, the dialogue process hit a snag as the Khan-founded party quit negotiations over the government's failure to form the judicial commissions to probe the May 9, 2023 violent protests and a crackdown on party protesters in Islamabad on November 26 last year, within seven days, as per their demands.

The PTI chief said his party has been striving for the rule of democracy and Constitution for 27 years. He said they were maintaining contacts with political parties in this regard as they wanted to take all the stakeholders into confidence over the 26th Constitutional Amendment as well as independent judiciary. Gohar said they would make every effort including protest for the formation of judicial commission.

On speculations about Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Chief Minister Ali Amin Gandapur's role in the party after Junaid Akbar replaced him as the party's KP president, the PTI chairman apprised media that the party founder dismissed rumours about Gandapur as false. "The party founder said Ali Amin Gandapur himself came to him and said he was not getting enough sleep due to heavy work load," he said, adding that the post of party's provincial president was changed on the KP chief minister's recommendation. The PTI founding chairman had categorically stated that disinformation was being disseminated against Gandapur, he maintained.

On the other hand, speaking to media outside the Supreme Court, PTI Senator Hamid Khan said the PTI would hold a series of conventions in Lahore, Islamabad and Karachi. "We will hold protests and conventions," he said, adding their struggle was constitutional and they had multiple options with them. Struggle for every organisation would not be of low scale, hence the lawyers should mentally be prepared, he said. Hamid said the PTI and the common men would finally have the last laugh in this struggle.

KARACHI: Federal Minister for Finance and Revenue, Senator Muhammad Aurangzeb on Tuesday highlighted the critical need for climate financing to combat the vulnerabilities posed by climate change.

Virtually addressing the 3rd Pakistan Climate Conference (PCC) organized by the Overseas Investors Chamber of Commerce and Industry (OICCI), he commended Overseas Investors Chamber of Commerce and Industries for organizing this vital conference to confront the urgent climate challenges Pakistan faces.

Ranked among the top 10 most climate-vulnerable countries globally, and with damages from the devastating 2022 floods exceeding $30 billion, the urgency for sustainable solutions and financing has never been crucial, he added. Highlighting the role of innovative financial tools in addressing the climate crisis, the Minister noted the importance of tapping into international funding mechanisms and fostering private-sector participation. He said, "Mobilizing sufficient climate finance demands enhanced access to international funding sources like the Green Climate Fund and the Adaptation Fund."

He continued, "The success of Pakistan's first green Eurobond in 2021, which raised $500 million, illustrates our capacity to attract sustainable investments. Expanding such initiatives, alongside tools like green bonds, sustainability-linked loans, and carbon credits, will empower the private sector to play a leading role in climate action."

Muhammad Aurangzeb also pointed out two major challenges facing Pakistan amid ongoing economic reforms: population growth and climate change. He reiterated the government's resolve to integrate climate considerations into national economic planning. "The Ministries of Finance, Climate, and Planning will work together to bring Pakistan onto a sustainable pathway of growth and resilience," he stated.

Concluding his address, he reassured stakeholders of the Ministry of Finance's dedication to creating an enabling environment for green investments and said, "Our commitment is unwavering. Through fiscal reforms, regulatory support, and capacity building, we aim to attract both international and domestic investments in green projects to secure a sustainable future for Pakistan."

The two-day conference provided a platform to policymakers, environmental experts, and business leaders to tackle Pakistan's escalating climate crisis and propose solutions for mitigation and adaptation. The conference included panel discussions and expert presentations on topics such as climate finance, the economic impacts of climate change, advancing circularity, decarbonization, and fostering public-private partnerships for climate resilience.

PTI's dialogue boycott A threat to democracy's core principles

PESHAWAR (APP): The decision by the Pakistan Tehreek-e-Insaf (PTI) leadership to unilaterally halt negotiations with the government committee has drawn widespread criticism across Khyber Pakhtunkhwa.

Experts and political analysts argued that this irrational move of PTI leadership strongly contradicted the very essence of democratic governance, which rests on dialogue, tolerance, cooperation, and compromise.

The PTI's abrupt decision has raised significant concerns regarding its commitment to democratic norms in Pakistan where democracy had derailed four times due to wrangling between political forces by not accepting the each others mandate.

By withdrawing from talks, the experts asserted that PTI is undermining the principles of democracy, which emphasized peaceful resolution of all issues through an open discussions in the parliament and dialogue process.

"This illogical move by the PTI marked a stark deviation from the foundational tenets of democracy, which stressed the importance of dialogue and resolving differences through peaceful negotiations," said Ikhtair Wali, the spokesperson for the Pakistan Muslim League-Nawaz (PML-N) in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa.

Speaking to APP, Ikhtair Wali deplored the PTI's irrational action, describing it as a pressure building tactics to get relief for the convicted PTI founder that would further entrench political polarization in the country.

"PTI's leadership had failed to reciprocate the goodwill gesture extended by the Government Committee, calling their decision "highly deplorable." The lack of willingness to engage in dialogue, Wali argued, showed a disregard for the democratic process and promotes division rather than political unity.

Professor Dr. A.H. Hilali, a political analyst, emphasized the necessity of a grand dialogue among political forces within a democratic system, stating that democracy thrived on compromise, debate, and collective decision-making.

"In a democratic government, the doors to dialogue should always remain open. Political dialogue is crucial to resolving constitutional and parliamentary issues," Dr. Hilali remarked, stressing that the PTI's boycott was an unfortunate rejection of these core values.

Many observers viewed that PTI's move as a retreat from democratic ideals, opting for confrontation rather than cooperation for face saving after conviction of its founder in £190million Al Qadar Trust case.

This, according to experts, risked the deepening political divisions and instability within the country. By choosing not to engage in dialogue, PTI's leadership tried to jeopardizing efforts to bridge the growing divide between political factions through dialogue.

Dr. Hilali pointed out that democracy was not just about winning elections, but about fostering an inclusive political system where disputes are resolved through peaceful means. "PTI's decision to halt dialogue signalled a troubling trend towards exclusivity and confrontational politics, which can only harm the democratic framework," he added. Concerns also abound about the potential negative precedent this decision may set in Pakistan.

The experts worried that if political parties begin to reject dialogue in favour of unilateral actions for personal motives, the very fabric of Pakistan's democracy could be weakened, eroding public trust in political institutions and governance besides political tolerance.

Former Minister Wajid Ali Khan reminded that the 1973 Constitution clearly defined the powers of all state institutions, including the legislature, executive, and judiciary.

He stressed that for Pakistan to progress on the path of democracy and rule of law, these institutions must operate within the constitutional framework and political parties should respect people's mandate.

Wajid Ali urged PTI to reconsider its hasty decision and engage with the government committee to re-initiate a meaningful political dialogue to address the pressing existing challenges.

He warned that deviating from the constitution could lead to severe political crises, and even trigger societal instability.

Manzoorul Haq, former ambassador and political analyst, echoed similar sentiments; underscoring that Pakistan has been facing a difficult political, economic, and legal situation for over seven decades and can not afford political stability further in the wake of geopolitical and strategic challenges in the region.

"It is imperative that political and religious leaders, as well as heads of state institutions, work in harmony to ensure the country's economic prosperity," he stated. According to Manzoor, political wrangling serves no purpose other than to destabilize the nation, which is already grappling with serious economic challenges.

He called on both the government and opposition leaders to come together for a meaningful dialogue that could steer Pakistan towards a more stable and prosperous future.

The experts urged PTI to return to the core democratic values of dialogue, mutual respect, and collaboration—values that are essential for the nation's stability and growth.

The petitioner would be arriving at Peshawar Airport from London and sought protective bail, fearing arrest by NAB Lahore. The lawyer argued that since Shah's arrest was imminent, he should be granted protective bail to enable him to approach the relevant court and seek relief.

However, Deputy Prosecutor General NAB Muhammad Ali opposed the application, stating that the petitioner Syed Masood Shah had previously obtained similar relief from the Peshawar High Court twice but failed to appear before the court.

NAB's prosecutor argued that Shah's actions amounted to an abuse of process and that he should approach the Lahore High Court instead, as the case falls within its jurisdiction. Attack journalists hold protest
F.P. Report

ATTOCK: General Secretary of Attock Press Club, senior journalist, and columnist Hafiz Shehzad Akhtar has stated that the PECA Act has been controversial from day one.

Through its vague and oppressive black laws, this act is being used to suppress journalists, ordinary citizens, and those raising their voices on social media. He said that this law is equivalent to criminalizing criticism of the government, which is against the principles of a democratic state. No journalistic organization or institution supports or promotes fake news, and the government should develop the tolerance to accept criticism instead of targeting journalists.

Instead, it should focus on improving its policies. This oppressive law has instilled fear among those expressing their opinions on print and social media. The threats of harsh punishments and fines are an attempt to limit freedom of expression. The law is being misused against political opponents and journalists critical of government policies, which amounts to abuse of power. We demand that the undemocratic and unconstitutional provisions of the PECA Act be immediately repealed, and legislation be introduced to protect press freedom and freedom of expression.

This law not only curbs press freedom but also weakens the democratic foundations of Pakistan. We appeal to the journalist community and the public to raise their voices against this oppressive law and defend their rights.

Commissioner said that no shortcoming will be tolerated in the timely completion of the said tasks. He was addressing the monthly performance and revenue meeting in his office. Deputy commissioners Mardan and Swabi, secretary to commissioner, assistant commissioners, TMAs and revenue officers participated in the meeting.

The meeting reviewed the implementation of various tasks assigned by the provincial government in Mardan and Swabi and the implementation of the public agenda of the Chief Minister Khyber Pakhtunkhwa in detail.

Regarding the campaign against encroachment, Commissioner Mardan directed the government departments in both districts to compile the data regarding permanent illegal encroachment on their lands and hand it over to the Deputy Commissioners so that immediate action can be taken against encroachments.

Commissioner Mardan directed to make the open katcheris productive and to set up a regular follow-up mechanism to resolve the public issues raised during these katcheris. He said that in order to protect the environment in both the districts, shifting the brick kilns to zig-zag technology as per the government policy, taking necessary steps in muhafiz khana to ensure the preservation of revenue records and improving the smooth traffic system be ensured.

Commissioner also directed to set up route allocation and registration system to limit the number of Cheng Chi and Taiz Rafatrickshaws. Commissioner Mardan said that apart from the presentation, the performance of the officers should be seen on the ground so that the public can get real relief.

Commissioner Nisar Ahmad emphasized on the measures to make both the district and tehsil headquarters of Mardan division and especially the entry point absorbent within two weeks and to improve the sanitation system in the government offices including roadsides and said that he himself would monitor this process.

DC redresses Bagh Dada graveyard dispute by consultation: Deputy Commissioner Mardan, resolved a long-standing dispute over a graveyard in Bagh Dada through his timely intervention and wise efforts. After mutual negotiations between the two parties at his office, an acceptable agreement was reached, on Tuesday.

DC Mardan Wazir far-sighted strategy and impartial role not only ended the bitterness between the people of the two villages but also resolved the graveyard issue through consensus, restoring peace and tranquility in the area. This successful mediation highlighted the local administration's effective strategy and commitment to resolving public issues, which is a source of satisfaction for the local people.

The elders of Bagh Dada and Haji Korona also expressed their gratitude to Dr. Wazir for his interest in resolving the issue and playing an effective role. This step is a testament to the administration's people-friendly policies and their determination to resolve issues.

World should fulfill its promise with Kashmiris

F.P. Report

ABBOTTABAD: The Convener of the All Parties Hurriyat Conference Azad Jammu and Kashmir (APHC-AJK) chapter, Ghulam Muhammad Safi, has stated that the movement for the right to self-determination will continue with full force until India's nefarious actions are removed from Indian illegally occupied Jammu and Kashmir (IIOJK).

Ghulam Muhammad Safi, while addressing a Kashmir Solidarity seminar in Abbottabad, said that the international community has promised the Kashmiris the right to self-determination, and they should fulfill this promise of self-determination to Kashmiris. He further stated that despite the presence of over one million Indian troops in IIOJK, India is attempting to mislead the world by singing the tune of normalcy.

The Convener of APHC-AJK said that India is changing the demographic balance by settling millions of non-state residents in IIOJK while committing acts of murder and violence. Despite India's oppression, brutality, and excessive use of force, the resolve of the people of IIOJK has not faltered.

The Hurriyat leader emphasized that India has illegally occupied Jammu and Kashmir and is attempting to turn the Muslim-majority region into a minority through illegal actions. He appealed to the United Nations to take notice of India's aggression and the grave situation in IIOJK.

He also welcomed the speech of Prime Minister Muhammad Shehbaz Sharif in Bhimber, AJK, and expressed gratitude for his efforts in informing the international community about the true situation in IIOJK and the atrocities being inflicted on the Kashmiri people.

Earlier, Ghulam Muhammad Safi, along with Amir Jamaat-e-Islami, Abbottabad, Abdul Rahman Abbasi, and his colleagues at the Al-Khidmat Foundation in Abbottabad.

Irish president accused of 'politicising' Holocaust event

DUBLIN (BBC): Israeli Ambassador to Ireland Dana Erlich has accused the Irish president of "politicising" a Holocaust Memorial Day Commemoration in Dublin. The event marked 80 years since the liberation of the Nazi concentration camp Auschwitz, and was held to remember victims of the Holocaust.

A number of people were removed and others left the event in Dublin's Mansion House in protest as Michael D Higgins delivered his speech, which referenced the Israel-Gaza war. Erlich said comments made by President Higgins had "predictably" admonished the state of Israel. It follows comments from the Israeli Foreign Minister, Gideon Saar, who said President Higgins had "resorted to a cheap, despicable provocation" during the event.

Dana Erlich said that by referencing the war in Gaza in the manner that he did, at this particular event with no reference to any other conflict, the president "consciously chose to draw an analogy" between current events and World War Two. She added: "The concerns of the Irish Jewish and Israeli communities about Ireland becoming a hostile place, a place where they are reluctant to express their Jewish identity and heritage, are not being addressed sufficiently".

Erlich also accused President Higgins of ignoring "the obvious link between the Holocaust and the state of Israel and how our country became a refuge for survivors of the worst genocide in history". During his speech, President Higgins described revenge as a "lessening of the human spirit" before referencing the Middle East moments later.

Audiences members walked out and others turned their backs when the president raised the war in Gaza. He said: "Those in Israel who mourn their loved ones, those who have been waiting for the release of hostages, or the thousands searching for relatives in the rubble in Gaza will welcome the long-overdue ceasefire for which there has been such a heavy price paid." President Higgins quoted both the Israeli peace activist Maoz Inon and the Palestinian peace activist Aziz Abu Sarah who, he said, each carried a near-unbearable grief and were asking people to listen to each other.

Some of those who turned their backs were removed from the building by security. In her statement, Dana Erlich expressed specific concern at this. "It was shocking to observe that attendees from the Jewish and Israeli community in Ireland, who chose to express disagreement with the president's comments in a dignified manner where forcibly removed from the memorial event and refused entry for the remainder of the commemoration."

She described it as an "ugly and regrettable scene" which has been viewed with "disbelief and disgust". The Minister for Foreign Affairs Simon Harris expressed his support for the president, who he said was "right" to mention the Middle East during his speech. Mr Harris told reporters in Brussels that he thought the president was "clear in relation to obviously specific issues regarding the Holocaust and his absolute condemnation of the horror, the murder of the Jewish people, but also, I think, rightly mentioning the situation in the Middle East as well but also calling very much for hostages to be released".

Harris said he was conscious it is a "very, very sensitive time" and he didn't wish to say anything to distract from that. The tanaiste (deputy prime minister) added he was "not sure" if the president's speech was vetted by the Department of Foreign Affairs prior to delivery. The president had rejected an earlier call from Dana Erlich to withdraw from giving a speech at the event following an accusation that he helped to nurture the "anti-Israeli atmosphere" in Ireland. In an earlier statement to Irish broadcaster RTÉ, President Higgins said he has strongly condemned anti-Semitism "again and again" throughout his career.

Last month, Israel's foreign minister announced that the country's embassy in Dublin would close over "the extreme anti-Israel policies of the Irish government".

Former Taoiseach (Irish prime minister) Harris said the decision by Israel to close its Irish embassy was "deeply regrettable". He also rejected that Ireland is anti-Israel. This followed the recognition of a Palestinian state by Ireland, along with Norway and Spain, in May last year.

Officials, residents attend commemoration

BERLIN (AP): Government officials and local residents attended a solemn Mass to honor a child and a man killed in a knife attack in Germany, an assault that amplified the debate about migration ahead of the Feb. 23 general election.

The ecumenical religious service at the Catholic Basilica of St. Peter and Alexander in Aschaffenburg, Bavaria, was briefly suspended for the tolling of the city's bells at the exact time that the attack took place on Wednesday, 11:45 a.m. Bavaria governor Markus Söder, Aschaffenburg Mayor Jürgen Herzog and Muslim imam Zischan Mehmood addressed the congregation that included rescuers, to express grief and disbelief at the loss of lives. German Interior Minister Nancy Faeser was also present.

"Compassion, solidarity and cohesion are more important than ever, because there are many dividers and agitators around us," Mehmood told the people gathered in and outside the church. "We must never allow grief and pain to tear us apart." Söder said the attack was a "senseless, brutal and disturbing crime."

"Good and evil are not a question of origin, nationality, ethnicity or faith," Söder said, and stressed that the killings should not lead to divisions because "incitement is the wrong answer." Before attending the service, Faeser and Söder laid wreaths at the site of the attack.

The attack is politically sensitive a month before Germany's national election as migration policy is among the top campaign issues. A 2-year-old boy of Moroccan origin, who was part of a group of kindergarten children, was killed, along with a 41-year-old German man who apparently intervened to protect the children in a city park. The arrested suspect is a 28-year-old former asylum-seeker from Afghanistan who had been told to leave Germany. Officials said he had received psychiatric treatment and there was no immediate indication that he was motivated by extremism.

He is being held in a psychiatric hospital, according to the German news agency, dpa. Bavarian officials said two adults and a 2-year-old Syrian girl were also hospitalized but there was no danger to their lives.

Thousands in Ireland still without power

LONDON (AP): Ireland called in help from England and France as repair crews worked to restore power to hundreds of thousands of people after the most disruptive storm for years. Even as the cleanup continued, more wet and windy weather hit the U.K., Ireland and France.

More than 1 million people in Ireland, Northern Ireland and Scotland were left without electricity after Storm Eowyn (pronounced AY-oh-win) roared through. In Ireland, which suffered the heaviest damage, the wind snapped telephone poles, ripped apart a Dublin ice rink and even toppled a giant wind turbine. A wind gust of 114 mph (183 kph) was recorded on the west coast, breaking a record set in 1945.

The state electricity company, ESB Networks, said that more than 300,000 properties in Ireland still had no power, down from 768,000. The Irish military was also helping out, but the company said that it could be two more weeks before electricity is restored to everyone.

Irish Minister for Social Protection Dara Calleary said authorities were "throwing everything at it." "We're bringing additional people from England today and we're looking for people from France, additional technicians," he told broadcaster RTE. "What we're focused on is getting our infrastructure back up, getting our power back up, getting our water and connectivity back up as soon as it is possible."

Another 75,000 people were still without power in Northern Ireland, which is part of the United Kingdom and neighbors the Republic of Ireland.

DR Congo hospitals overwhelmed after Goma fighting: UN

DR CONGO (BBC): UN aid agencies have warned of a major humanitarian crisis in the Congolese city of Goma, with hospitals overwhelmed by casualties and bodies lying on the streets. Thousands of people have been fleeing "multiple active conflict zones", the UN refugee agency, UNHCR, said.

The aid agencies said their warehouses with food and medical supplies have been looted as M23 rebels continue to battle to take control of the city. Anger has been growing over the M23 offensive, and calls for peace talks to end the fighting are mounting.

"Hospitals are overwhelmed. There are currently hundreds of people in hospital, most admitted with gunshot wounds," Adelheid Marschang, the World Health Organization's emergency response coordinator for the Democratic Republic of Congo said. Speaking to reporters in Geneva, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) said its hospital in Goma received more than 100 wounded in just 24 hours, a number it previously received over the course of a month.

It said this had forced its staff to turn the hospital car park into a triage unit. The use of heavy artillery in densely populated areas is causing severe injuries, particularly among children, it added. Both the ICRC and the World Food Programme say their warehouses have been looted in recent days.

In the capital Kinshasa, angry protesters on Tuesday burned parts of the French embassy, to express discontent over the M23's offensive. They stormed the streets, burning tyres and disrupting traffic. Plumes of smoke could be seen billowing as parts of the embassy went up in flames. French Foreign Minister Jean-Noël Barrot said on X that the attack was "unacceptable", adding that the fire was now under control.

The Rwandan, Ugandan, Belgian and US embassies were also targeted, with some of the buildings being looted. Police fired tear gas to disperse the protesters. Some residents preferred to observe a day of the "dead city", following a call by civil societies to stay at home in solidarity with Goma. The AFP news agency reported that at least 17 people had been killed in Goma and close to 400 wounded in the fighting, citing hospital reports. Civil society groups were quoted as reporting a higher death toll of 25.

On Tuesday, South Africa said that four more of its soldiers, who are in DR Congo as part of peacekeeping efforts, had died as a result of clashes with the M23. This brings the total number of South African casualties to 13. Malawi and Uruguay have also lost peacekeepers. South Africa's President Cyril Ramaphosa spoke to his Rwandan counterpart Paul Kagame, with the two agreeing on an urgent need for ceasefire and resumption of peace talks.

The African Union is also set to host an emergency meeting later on Tuesday. DR Congo President Félix Tshisekedi held a meeting with leaders of some state institutions to evaluate the situation in Goma. "Our soldiers and the [pro-government militia] Wazalendo continue to hold certain positions in the city" said Vital Kamerhe, the speaker of the National Assembly after the meeting.

He said the president would address the nation later on the matter, without giving specific details. Goma has been cut off from electricity and water, and Mr Kamerhe said the government was working hard to restore them to the city. He said the government was also seeking diplomatic and political solutions to the crisis. It came as the new US Secretary of State Marco Rubio condemned the M23 attack in a call with Tshisekedi. In a statement, the US State Department said the Congolese leader agreed on the need to restart peace talks "as soon as possible" with Rwanda, which is accused of backing the rebels. Mr Rubio also spoke to Kenya's President William Ruto, agreeing to push forward peace talks. A meeting called by the Kenyan leader between Tshisekedi and Kagame has been scheduled for Wednesday. The Congolese government has also asked for another meeting of the UN Security Council - demanding that this time it take tough action against Rwanda.

During an emergency UN meeting, DR Congo demanded sanctions against Rwanda, saying its forces had crossed into its territory in what amounted to a "declaration of war". Following the meeting, the UN condemned M23 advances and the "ongoing flagrant disregard for the sovereignty and territorial integrity of the DR Congo", including the presence of "external forces". Rwanda has in the past denied direct support for the M23, but the UN peacekeeping chief Jean-Pierre Lacroix has said there is no doubt its troops were supporting the rebels.

US puts Colombia tariff, sanctions threat on hold

WASHINGTON/BOGOTA (Reuters): The US and Colombia pulled back from the brink of a trade war after the White House said the South American nation had agreed to accept military aircraft carrying deported migrants.

US President Donald Trump had threatened tariffs and sanctions on Colombia to punish it for earlier refusing to accept military flights carrying deportees as part of his sweeping immigration crackdown. But in a statement, the White House said Colombia had agreed to accept the migrants after all and Washington would not impose its threatened penalties.

"The Government of Colombia has agreed to all of President Trump's terms, including the unrestricted acceptance of all illegal aliens from Colombia returned from the United States, including on US military aircraft, without limitation or delay," it said. Draft orders imposing tariffs and sanctions on Colombia would be "held in reserve, and not signed, unless Colombia fails to honor this agreement", it added.

In a statement, Colombian Foreign Minister Luis Gilberto Murillo said: "We have overcome the impasse with the US government." "The government of Colombia... has the presidential plane ready to facilitate the return of Colombians who were going to arrive in the country this morning on deportation flights."

The draft measures included imposing 25% tariffs on all Colombian goods coming into the US, which would go up to 50% in one week; a travel ban and visa revocations on Colombian government officials; and emergency treasury, banking and financial sanctions. Trump also said he would also direct enhanced border inspections of Colombian nationals and cargo. A State Department spokesperson said the United States had suspended visa processing at the US embassy in Bogota.

Colombia is the third largest US trading partner in Latin America, while the US is Colombia's largest trading partner. Colombian President Gustavo Petro earlier condemned the military deportation flights and said he would never carry out a raid to return handcuffed Americans to the US "We are the opposite of the Nazis," he wrote in a post on social media platform X.

But he also said Colombia would welcome home deported migrants on civilian planes, and offered his presidential plane to facilitate their "dignified return". Trump declared illegal immigration a national emergency and imposed a sweeping crackdown since taking office. He directed the US military to help with border security, issued a broad ban on asylum and took steps to restrict citizenship for children born on US soil. Mexico also refused a request last week to let a US military aircraft land with migrants.

Trump has said he is thinking about imposing 25% duties on imports from Canada and Mexico on Feb. 1 to force further action against illegal immigrants and fentanyl flowing into the US.

Italy sends 49 more migrants to Albania

SHENGJIN, Albania (AP): An Italian navy ship arrived Tuesday in Albania with 49 migrants intercepted in international waters for processing of their asylum applications at special Albanian centers, in the third such attempt following hurdles earlier raised by Italian courts.

Italy's Interior Ministry did not specify the nationality of the migrants brought to the port of Shengjin, 66 kilometers (40 miles) northwest of the capital, Tirana, but Italian media said they were from Bangladesh, Egypt, Ivory Coast and Gambia. The attempt at processing in Albania follows two previous failures in October and November, when Italian judges refused to approve the detention of two small groups at the Albanian centers, built under a contentious agreement between Italy and Albania. The courts ruled that the migrants' countries of origin weren't safe enough for them to face the possibility of being sent back by the centers.

The cases have been referred to the European Court of Justice, which earlier established that asylum applicants could not undergo a fast-track procedure that could lead to repatriation if their home countries are not deemed completely safe. The European court hearing on the case is scheduled for Feb. 25.

Italian Premier Giorgia Meloni's government has vowed to reactivate the two centers in Albania after they remained dormant following the Italian courts' decisions. Meloni's position was partially backed by a ruling in late December by Italy's highest court, which said Italian judges could not substitute for government policy in deciding which countries are safe for repatriation of migrants whose asylum requests are rejected.

The decision does allow lower courts to make such determinations on a case-by-case basis, short of setting overall policy. The migrants are to be checked in at a reception center at the port of Shengjin before being taken to the Gjader accommodation center, about 22 kilometers (14 miles) to the east.

The November 2023 agreement allows up to 3,000 migrants intercepted by the Italian coast guard in international waters each month to be sheltered in Albania and vetted for possible asylum in Italy or repatriation. Italy has agreed to welcome those migrants who are granted asylum, while those whose applications are rejected face deportation directly from Albania.

The agreement to outsource the housing of asylum-seekers to a non-European Union member country has been hailed by some countries which like Italy are experiencing a high level of migrant arrivals, but human rights activists have criticized the deal as setting a dangerous precedent. So far this year, 3,704 migrants have arrived in Italy, more than double the number in the same period last year, when 1,305 arrived.

My opponents choose jail and exile, Lukashenko tells BBC

LONDON (BBC): I have reported on many elections. I have seen prime ministers and presidents roll up at polling stations, cast ballots and then take a few questions from reporters. But I have never seen anything quite like the scene at Polling Station 478 in Minsk.

Long-time leader of Belarus Alexander Lukashenko, once dubbed "Europe's last dictator", arrived to cast his ballot. Then, while Belarusians were still voting, candidate Lukashenko gave a four-and-a-half hour press conference live on state TV. It was an opportunity to quiz him on the controversial vote which his critics have denounced as "a sham".

"What wretched question have you prepared for me?" he asked. "Like you always do." "Good morning," I replied. "Good morning, Steve." "How can you call this a democratic election, when your main rivals are either in prison or in exile?" I asked. "Some are in prison, and some are in exile. But you are here!" said Lukashenko.

"Everyone has the right to choose. That is democracy. Some chose prison, others chose exile. We never forced anyone out of the country."

In reality, it was the authorities' brutal crackdown on protesters after the 2020 presidential election that led to Alexander Lukashenko's staunchest opponents either being jailed or driven into political exile. Personal choice did not come into it. "You said recently 'We mustn't shut people's mouths' [silence people]," I reminded him.

"But your rivals haven't just been kept off the ballot. Some of them have been jailed. There are currently more than 1,200 political prisoners in Belarus. Isn't it time to open the prison cells and release them? People like Maria Kolesnikova, Sergei Tikhanovsky..." "You keep going on about Maria to me. My God," Lukashenko sighed. "OK, I'll answer your question...Prison is for people who have opened their mouths too wide and who have broken the law. Don't you have prisons in Britain and America?" "In any country, if you break the law, you must bear the consequences," he continued. "The law is strict but it is the law. I didn't invent it. You need to abide by it."

"You need to abide by the law," I interjected. "But these people are in prison for criticising you." "Ignorance of the law does not absolve you of responsibility before it." Although prominent opposition figures were not allowed to run, Alexander Lukashenko's name was not the only one on the ballot. There were four other candidates. But they came across more like spoilers than serious challengers.

"We spoke to some of the other candidates," I told Lukashenko. "One of them, the Communist Party leader, openly supports you. Another is full of praise for you. It's a strange election, isn't it, with opponents like this..." "Steve, this is a whole new experience for you!" he replied, to laughter and applause from local journalists in the room. "That's true," I said. "I haven't seen an election like this before."

"The Communists' policy based on justice is the same policy that we're promoting," argued Lukashenko. "So why would they vote against me?" The European Union's foreign policy chief Kaja Kallas has characterised this presidential election in Belarus as a "blatant affront to democracy". Not that Alexander Lukashenko seems to care. "I swear to you," he told me, "I couldn't care less whether you recognise our election or whether you don't. The most important thing for me is that the people of Belarus recognise it."

Navy submarine name change is woke nonsense, says Shapps

LONDON (BBC): The Royal Navy has announced it is changing the name of a new submarine from HMS Agincourt to HMS Achilles, in a move branded "woke nonsense" by former Defence Secretary Grant Shapps.

It follows reports of concern within the Ministry of Defence that the original name for the vessel - which is being built in Barrow, Cumbria - may have offended the French. Agincourt refers to a battle England won against France in 1415, as part of the Hundred Years' War.

The Royal Navy said the submarine would instead be named HMS Achilles and that the change had been under discussion for more than a year. A spokesperson said Achilles particularly appropriate as the world prepares to mark the 80th anniversaries of Victory in Europe and Victory over Japan days - both of which take place this year.

A previous vessel named HMS Achilles received battle honours during World War Two. Another ship with the name took part in the Battle of Trafalgar in 1805, when the Royal Navy defeated a French and Spanish fleet. Gavin Williamson, a Conservative former defence secretary, first announced the name Agincourt in 2018 for the under-construction vessel, the seventh of the Astute Class submarines to be commissioned. There had previously been suggestions it could be named Ajax.

A Navy statement said the name change had been under discussion for more than a year and "was proposed by the Royal Navy Ships Names and Badging committee and approved by His Majesty the King". But the switch has caused controversy, not least because the announcement came shortly before the Sun newspaper was due to publish a story on internal debates over its planned name.

In a post on X, Shapps said "renaming HMS Agincourt is nothing short of sacrilege". He said the original name signified a defining moment in British history. "Under Labour,

French residents rescued from flooded homes by boat

RENNES, France (AP): Residents in western France used boats to escape their flooded homes as rivers and waterways broke their banks after successive storms battered Normandy and Brittany.

The national weather service had issued flood and wind warnings as Storm Herminia hit Spain, France on parts of the UK. Normandy and Brittany were already waterlogged after the passage of last week's Storm Eowyn - which left two people dead from fallen trees and more than 1 million people without electricity in Ireland and Britain.

Storm Herminia caused road closures in some areas of France. About 400 people were evacuated from homes in and around the city of Rennes, at the heart of the hardest-hit region. The mayor called it the city's worst flooding in more than 40 years, and said in a statement that the waters weren't expected to start receding until Wednesday.

Trump's 'clean it out' comment risks undermining his own work towards Gaza peace

FEW words carry as much weight around the world as those spoken by an American president. Just a week into his new term in office, US President Donald Trump's remarks to reporters aboard Air Force One that it was time to "clean out" Gaza renewed concerns about the future of Palestinians whose land is under threat.

Mr Trump's comments were accompanied by his observation that the war has turned the Palestinian enclave into "a demolition site" and a suggestion that Arab states take in its civilians. Taken in context, it was unclear whether the President was suggesting the temporary hosting of the population in nearby countries to help clear out Gaza's rubble, or prescribing what many Palestinians have long feared – a permanent Israeli occupation and the exile of Gaza's population.

The notion of "cleaning" the Gaza Strip, in any case, echoes troubling remarks made by Mr Trump's son in law and former foreign policy adviser, Jared Kushner, last year, in which he suggested Israel "clean up" the territory's "very valuable waterfront property" by moving Palestinians to the Negev Desert.

At a time when Gaza's ceasefire, skilfully prodded into existence by Mr Trump himself, is showing progress, the President's choice of words has created confusion and some concern. Hamas has begun returning Israeli hostages it kidnapped in its attack on Israel 15 months ago. Israel, for its part, has released detainees including children and opened the coastal road to allow tens of thousands of displaced civilians to return to their homes in northern Gaza.

But extremists in Israel have already seized upon Mr Trump's remark to promote their agenda of Gaza's erasure and permanent Israeli settlement in the enclave. Itamar Ben-Gvir, the former national security minister who leads the anti-Arab Jewish Power Party, praised Mr Trump's "initiative to transfer residents from Gaza to Jordan and Egypt". While Jewish Power left the governing coalition this month, other serving Cabinet ministers such as Bezalel Smotrich, Minister of Finance, seem to agree with Mr Ben-Gvir's views. Furthermore, the idea of Gaza forming part of a future Palestinian state – indeed, the idea of Palestinian statehood at all – is moribund in Israeli politics. All of this poses a serious risk to a peaceful future.

The response to Mr Trump's comments from Jordan and Egypt has been forceful. Jordanian Foreign Minister Ayman Safadi put it bluntly: "The solution to the Palestinian problem lies in Palestine." The Egyptian Foreign Ministry, meanwhile, said in a statement that any transfer of Palestinians would "threaten stability and risks escalating the conflict in the region".

For months, Amman, Cairo and a host of other Arab capitals have worked diligently, in co-operation with the US and Israel, to carve pathways towards a sustainable end to the Gaza war and long-term peace based on a two state solution. In all scenarios, Palestinian statehood – which includes territory in both Gaza and the occupied West Bank – is fundamental. And by and large, the international community agrees – more than three quarters of UN member states already recognise the state of Palestine.

As Mr Trump's role in instigating the Gaza ceasefire shows, in addition to efforts under his predecessor to secure a ceasefire in Lebanon, Washington continues to wield the influence required to do good in the Middle East – when its policy machinery is pointed in the right direction. To prevent any chance at peace from unravelling, Mr Trump must build on the fragile successes of recent months, and be careful not to undermine them.

Weaving trust, catalyzing willingness Exercise Aman as a springboard for greater maritime cooperation

Sohail A. Azmic

EXERCISE Aman is poised to begin soon, marking the 9th edition of this significant biennial event, which has been held in Karachi since 2007. Over the years, much has been discussed about the exercise, but it's important to ask: what does it truly accomplish that matters on a regional or global scale? One might argue that there are numerous other multinational maritime exercises, such as RIMPAC, Kakadu, Malabar, IMDEX, Komodo and Joint Warrior, which also involve the participation of multiple nations. So what makes Exercise Aman distinct? While it shares similarities with these high-profile exercises, the key difference lies in its unparalleled ability to provide a platform that brings together diverse nations. The true impact of Exercise Aman is not just in the naval drills or intellectual discourse, but in its power to unite countries with varying geopolitical interests and military orientations. It's rare to see China, Russia, the United States and Iran side-by-side anywhere else. This gathering of such disparate powers on one platform is not only rare but essential in today's complex global landscape, creating opportunities for dialogue, understanding and cooperation where it would not normally exist.

As I previously discussed in my Op-Ed, 'United by tides, knotted by oceans,' published in The Nation on November 5, 2024, navies have the ability to come 'closer and operate together,' irrespective of political barriers that may at times seem hard to transcend. Exercise Aman, in my perspective, could be thought of paving way for 'weaving trust' and 'catalyzing willingness' for 'greater maritime cooperation.' Because this is what is mostly needed for the current and emerging challenges and not the hardcore naval warfare tactics, which basically are essential for fighting traditional wars. Aman is not about fighting wars, but about finding ways to keep the seas securer, safer and freer.

'Weaving trust' in the context of Exercise Aman is a deliberate process of building relationships that are strong, resilient and enduring. Each participating nation contributes a thread to a fabric of mutual understanding, respect and collaboration. Trust is weaved as navies from diverse geopolitical backgrounds once gather at one place. For example, during the AMAN-21 exercise, over 45 countries, including the US, China and Russia, came together despite their stark strategic differences. Another constituent of weaving trust is the interoperability. We often think in technical terms when we refer to 'interoperability,' but it has a human dimension too. Aman facilitates trust-building by allowing naval professionals from different navies to work side by side, sharing best practices and developing a mutual understanding of operating procedures. This is human interoperability. And such an interoperability, in great measure, reduces misconceptions, misunderstandings and miscommunication, cumulatively enabling weaving of trust among the participating parties.

'Catalyzing willingness' is about the transformative power of Exercises Aman, which inspires the participants to take proactive roles in maritime cooperation by committing resources, energy and intellectual capital toward objectives that affect us all. Tangible benefits of collaboration, e.g., maritime domain awareness is important for smaller nations like Tanzania and Djibouti, which lack resources, find value in the cooperation as professed by Aman to protect their maritime interests. Coming to Aman builds confidence among the participants to undertake riskier yet necessary operations, such as handling illegal fishing, human/ narco smuggling and arms trafficking. Another conspicuous factor that makes Aman a bit different from rest of the international maritime exercises is its inclusivity, which promotes an 'egalitarian approach' to maritime cooperation, e.g., in the Aman Dialogue, the smaller states are likely to be given an equal voice, which certainly will result in the enhanced willingness to participate and cooperate in pursuit of common good. While delving into ways for catalyzing willingness, sometimes a question may arise, whether Aman is an end or a means to an end? Of course, it is a means to an end. The end for some could be a state of maritime security that keeps the seas stable, and for some Aman could lead to more focused bilateral engagements among the participants who may have interacted for first time at Aman's platform.

Weaving trust and catalyzing willingness, as the two 'operational' lines of effort of Aman are ultimately linked to the clearer end state of 'greater maritime cooperation.' But the key question is as what really has been the practical manifestation of greater maritime cooperation or what it could be in the future? I'd say if I have to pick three concrete domains, it would be: information sharing, practitioners' exchange of real-world challenges and capacity building. Aman participants have regularly been briefed/ shown Pakistan's Joint Maritime Information & Coordination Centre, which now remains integrated with 8 international agencies/ departments. Commencing with this year's edition, Aman Dialogue is all about listening and sharing views with the naval leaders around the world on the challenges that they continue to face or expected to confront at seas and what may possibly be done to deal with it. This newer aspect of Aman is definitely the practical form making space for further cooperation. Smaller navies get to know how things are changing and from where they can get support for their capacity building. Aman actually helped states like Djibouti, Sri Lanka, Iraq, Bahrain and Qatar to explore avenues for training, technical collaboration and operational refinement.

Exercise Aman is more than just a series of maritime drills; it embodies a unique opportunity for participants to transcend political divides and build partnerships. By focusing on human interoperability, inclusivity and tangible outcomes, Aman suggests recouring to a more unified and resilient maritime community. As the exercise continues to evolve, it remains an important mean for international cooperation at sea aiming for a more secure and stable maritime future for all.

Gaza's new model for Palestinian unity

EVEN those of us who have long emphasized the importance of the Palestinian people's voice, experience and collective action in Palestinian history have been shocked by the cultural revolution resulting from the Israeli war on Gaza.

By cultural revolution, I mean the defiant and rebellious narrative evolving in Gaza, where people see themselves as active participants in the popular resistance, not just mere victims of the Israeli war machine.

When the ceasefire came into effect on the 471st day of the Israeli genocide, Gazans rushed to the streets in celebration. Media outlets reported that they were celebrating the ceasefire, but judging by their chants and songs and the symbols on display, they were celebrating their collective victory, steadfastness (sumud) and resilience against the powerful Israeli army, supported by the US and other Western countries.

Using basic means, they rushed to clean their streets, clearing debris to allow the displaced to search for homes. Though their homes had been destroyed – 90 percent of Gaza's housing units have been damaged, according to the UN – they were still happy. Even to sit on the wreckage. Some prayed atop concrete slabs, some sang in large, growing crowds and others cried but insisted no power could ever uproot them from Palestine.

Social media was flooded with Gazans expressing a mix of emotions, though they were mostly defiant, expressing their resolve not just in political terms but also in other ways, including humor.

Of course, the body-builders returned to their gyms to find them mostly destroyed. Rather than lament their losses, they salvaged machines and resumed training amid collapsed walls and ceilings punctured by Israeli missiles.

There was also the father and son who composed a song in the "ahazaj" style, a traditional Levantine vocalization. The son, overjoyed to find his father alive, was reassured by his father that they would never abandon their homeland.

As for the children – those who were not among the 14,500 killed, according to UNRWA – they resumed their childhood. They claimed destroyed Israeli tanks in Rafah, Beit Hanoun and elsewhere as their new playgrounds.

One teenager, pretending to be a scrap metal salesman, yelled, "One Israeli Merkava tank for sale," as his friends filmed and laughed. He finished by saying, "Make sure you send this video to (Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin) Netanyahu," before moving on, unfazed.

This does not mean Gaza is free of unimaginable pain, which is difficult for the rest of the world to fully comprehend. The emotional and psychological scars of the war will last a lifetime and never fully recover from the trauma. But Gazans know they cannot afford to grieve in the usual way. So, they emphasize their identity, unity and defiance as a way to overcome their grief.

Parallel to its military assault on Gaza since Oct. 7, 2023, Israel has invested heavily in attempting to divide the Palestinian people and shatter their spirit.

In Gaza, its warplanes dropped millions of flyers on starving refugees, urging them to rebel against Palestinian factions by providing Israel with the names of "troublemakers." The Israeli army offered large rewards for information, but little was achieved. These flyers also called for tribal leaders to take control of their areas in exchange for food and protection. To punish those who resisted, Israel systematically killed clan representatives and councilors who tried to distribute aid throughout Gaza, especially in the north, where famine was devastating.

Against overwhelming odds, Palestinians remained united. When the ceasefire was declared, they celebrated as one nation. With Gaza destroyed, Israel's actions obliterated the Strip's class, regional, ideological and political divides. Everyone in Gaza became a refugee: the rich, the poor, Muslims, Christians, city dwellers and refugee camp residents were all equally affected.

The unity that remains in Gaza, despite one of the most horrific genocides in modern history, should serve as a wake-up call. It proves that the narrative that Palestinians are divided and need to "find common ground" is false.

The old notion of political unity through a merger of the Palestinian Authority and various Palestinian factions is no longer viable. The reality is that the fragmentation of the Palestinian political landscape cannot be solved through mere political agreements or negotiations between factions.

However, a different kind of unity has already taken root in Gaza and, by extension, across Palestinian communities throughout the Occupied Territories and the rest of the world. This unity is visible in the millions of Palestinians who have demonstrated against the war, chanted for Gaza, cried for Gaza and developed a new political discourse around it.

This unity does not rely on talking heads on Arabic satellite channels or secret meetings in expensive hotels. It needs no diplomatic talks. Years of endless discussions, "unity documents" and fiery speeches have only led to disappointment.

True unity has already been achieved, as felt in the voices of ordinary Gazans who no longer identify as members of a faction. They are Gazawiyya. Palestinians from Gaza, and nothing else.

This is the unity that must now form the foundation of a new discourse.

Pakistan's winter drought: A wake-up call for climate action

Muhammad Mohsin Iqbal

PAKISTAN is currently grappling with an alarming drought during the winter season, with rainfall significantly lower than in previous years. Traditionally, the regions of Galiyat, Malika-e-Kohsar Murree, and the northern areas are blanketed in snow by this time, but this year, they remain barren. According to the Meteorological Department, rainfall over the past three months has been critically scarce, raising serious concerns about the country's climate patterns and environmental stability.

One of the primary reasons for the decrease in rainfall is the global phenomenon of climate change. Rising global temperatures have disrupted traditional weather patterns, leading to unpredictable and extreme weather events worldwide. Pakistan, despite contributing minimally to global greenhouse gas emissions, is one of the most climate-vulnerable countries. The melting of glaciers, erratic monsoons, and now, insufficient winter rainfall highlight the pressing impacts of this crisis. The warming atmosphere retains more moisture, altering the distribution and intensity of precipitation. This could explain why regions that previously experienced heavy snowfall are now witnessing dry spells.

Environmental pollution is another critical factor exacerbating the situation. Urbanization, industrial emissions, and vehicular pollution have significantly increased the concentration of pollutants in the atmosphere. These pollutants interfere with cloud formation and precipitation processes, further reducing rainfall.

Moreover, Pakistan's air quality has deteriorated to hazardous levels, especially in urban areas like Lahore, which not only impacts human health but also disrupts ecological balance.

Deforestation is yet another major contributor to this crisis. The large-scale cutting of trees, whether for urban development, agriculture, or timber, has disrupted the natural water cycle. Forests play a vital role in maintaining humidity levels and attracting rainfall. The loss of tree cover has not only led to soil erosion and desertification but has also reduced the ability of ecosystems to regulate weather patterns. Pakistan's forest cover is already far below the global standard, and continued deforestation will only worsen the situation.

The recent decline in rainfall has also been linked to the growing phenomenon of droughts in Pakistan. The country has faced recurring droughts over the past five years, particularly in regions like Sindh and Balochistan, where water scarcity has become a persistent issue. The agricultural sector, which forms the backbone of Pakistan's economy, is particularly vulnerable. Reduced rainfall impacts crop yields, threatens food security, and increases dependence on groundwater, further depleting already strained water resources.

A review of Pakistan's weather patterns over the past five years reveals a worrying trend. Rainfall during both summer and winter seasons has become increasingly erratic, with some years experiencing devastating floods while others suffer from prolonged dry spells. This inconsistency poses a significant challenge to water management and agricultural planning. The unpredictability of monsoons and the lack of winter rains this year are clear indications that Pakistan must prioritize climate resilience and sustainable environmental practices. To address the immediate and long-term implications of this crisis, several emergency measures must be implemented. First, a national reforestation campaign should be launched to increase forest cover, particularly in drought-prone regions. Second, water conservation practices must be promoted at all levels, from individual households to industries. Rainwater harvesting, efficient irrigation techniques, and the rehabilitation of water reservoirs can help mitigate the impact of reduced rainfall. Third, stricter regulations are needed to curb environmental pollution, including transitioning to cleaner energy sources, enforcing vehicular emissions standards, and promoting public awareness about the importance of environmental preservation.

Additionally, Pakistan must actively participate in global efforts to combat climate change. This includes honoring international commitments, such as the Paris Agreement, and advocating for financial and technical support from developed nations to enhance climate resilience. Collaboration with neighboring countries on shared water resources and regional climate strategies can also play a crucial role in addressing this crisis.

There are Quranic injunctions regarding drought and the hadiths, including the prayer of istisqa, shed light on the occurrence of rain and drought. These spiritual practices emphasize the need to turn to Allah in times of difficulty, seeking His mercy and guidance. The Quran states, "And We send down blessed rain from the sky and bring forth thereby gardens and grain from the harvest" (Surah Qaf 50:9). This verse highlights Allah's mercy in providing rain as a blessing and a source of sustenance. Another verse declares, "He causes it to reach whom He wills of His servants" (Surah Ar-Rum

Urbanization, industrial emissions, and vehicular pollution have significantly increased the concentration of pollutants in the atmosphere. These pollutants interfere with cloud formation and precipitation processes, further reducing rainfall.

Trump sets about his retribution agenda with relish

FOR Donald Trump, revenge is a dish best served piping hot.

The president is wasting no time in following through on his frequent campaign trail vows for retribution – with a torrent of purges and pardons.

Trump's sending a chilling message through the US government: officials who cross him, investigate his alleged abuses of power, or join his critics once they leave office must beware his fury. Their livelihoods and even their lives could be at risk. But those who act in his name, even violently, like January 6, 2021, convicts, can expect protection.

The reckoning gathered pace on Monday.

More than a dozen career officials, who worked on the Justice Department investigations into Trump and who should have civil service protections, were fired after being told they could not be trusted to "faithfully" implement his agenda.

In another development, the administration opened a "special project" to take concrete steps to probe prosecutors who oversaw criminal obstruction cases against certain January 6 defendants that were ultimately tossed because of a Supreme Court decision last summer.

These steps followed the dismissal of more than a dozen government agency watchdog officials known as inspectors general. It was lost on nobody that the official who informed Congress about Trump's pressure on Ukraine to investigate Joe Biden, which led to Trump's first impeachment, was an intelligence community IG.

Last week, Trump stripped security details from some former key officials, including former Secretary of State Mike Pompeo and former national security adviser John Bolton, who are facing threats from Iran after serving Trump during his first term.

Trump's legal maneuverings came alongside an escalating initiative to strip the government of top layers of the civil service. In another shocking move, the administration put about 60 senior career officials at USAID on immediate leave, following Trump's executive order that froze almost all foreign assistance.

As the president targeted government officials who did not break the law, Washington is still reeling from the pardons and commutations offered to thousands of January 6 rioters, some of whom who beat up police officers in 2021.

These moves show Trump is determined to learn from his first term, when he was often frustrated by the checks and balances of government and believed he was thwarted by career officials.

A recurring question over the next four years will be whether the unprecedented actions from Trump are those of an anti-establishment disrupter that simply offend normal presidential decorum or whether they are illegal or corrupt.

Conservatives argue that Trump, after winning an election and saying exactly what he'd do with a second term, is well within his rights in gutting the government. Many Republicans before Trump felt that the federal bureaucracy actively thwarted right-wing policies that voters installed a president to pursue. And one reason Trump triumphed last November was his case that the federal government was failing the

Conservatives argue that Trump, after winning an election and saying exactly what he'd do with a second term, is well within his rights in gutting the government. Many Republicans before Trump felt that the federal bureaucracy actively thwarted right-wing policies that voters installed a president to pursue. And one reason Trump triumphed last November was his case that the federal government was failing the American people in multiple ways. Many Republicans also agree with the president's claims that the multiple criminal investigations against him over the last four years amounted to political persecution.

American people in multiple ways.

Many Republicans also agree with the president's claims that the multiple criminal investigations against him over the last four years amounted to political persecution. Once that is accepted, the line between career and political appointees in the DOJ becomes blurred for many conservatives who believe the entire legal system is corrupted and biased.

Still, Trump's recent efforts to apparently thwart accountability are extraordinary. In any normal administration – one not characterized by a flood-the-zone strategy of incessant presidential power plays – any one of them would be a scandal. For example, former first lady Hillary Clinton's firings in the White House travel office in 1993 spawned an ethics brouhaha investigated by the DOJ and the FBI that only ended in the last year of the Clinton administration with no charges.

Presidents might win mandates, but that doesn't give them the right to break the law. Trump's administration failed to give Congress the required 30 days of notice of the dismissals of the inspectors general, raising concern even among GOP senators. And while presidents often dismiss politically appointed prosecutors when they take office, career DOJ officials are supposed to be sheltered by legal protections.

Ken Buck, a former Republican congressman, told CNN's Erin Burnett on Monday that the case of the dismissed Justice Department employees was "unique," motivated by political goals and was "wrong."

The officials concerned, who are not accused of criminal wrongdoing, were notified by acting Attorney General James McHenry. He wrote: "Given your significant role in prosecuting the President, I do not believe that the leadership of the Department can trust you to assist in implementing the President's agenda faithfully."

The administration is not even hiding that this is retribution since it references the prosecution of Trump in former special counsel Jack Smith's investigations into election interference and his hoarding of classified documents.

Jennifer Rodgers, a CNN legal analyst, highlighted distinctions between Justice Department professionals in offices that are charged with carrying out political goals and prosecutors who work on criminal cases.

"The president shouldn't have an agenda for criminal cases. ... In the criminal realm, you are not supposed to have priorities, you are supposed to follow the facts, and apply the law, and charge who needs to be charged," Rodgers, a former federal prosecutor, told Anderson Cooper. "Watchdogs or lapdogs?"

The history of Trump's first term – when he, for instance, fired FBI Chief James Comey over the Russia investigation and turned on Attorney General Jeff Sessions for recusing himself – hints at motives for his recent actions. It seems clear he's trying to intimidate career officials who might investigate him or block his expansive use of executive power. He's also sending a signal to aides in his new administration they could end up like Pompeo or Bolton if they turn on him.

The ouster of the inspectors general, meanwhile, may ensure that the waste, fraud and political abuses that watchdogs are supposed to investigate may go unmonitored.

Mark Greenblatt, a former Department of Interior inspector general who was fired by Trump, said the greatest concern was the erosion of independent oversight.

"The whole construct of inspectors general, it's based on us being independent, that we're not carry out his agenda? Yes. He won the election. What do you expect him to do, just leave everybody in place in Washington before he got elected?" Graham went on: "This makes perfect sense to me. Get new people. He feels like the government hasn't worked very well for the American people."

Senate Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley has long been a supporter of IGs. And he issued a statement on Saturday asking for more details. But it would be a surprise if the veteran Iowa Republican comes down hard on the Trump administration.

Another Trump ally, Sen Tom Cotton, said Sunday that inspectors general serve at the pleasure of the president and "he wants new people in there." But the Arkansas Republican did express disquiet at the president's treatment of Pompeo and Bolton and others targeted by Iran and asked him to reconsider. "It's better to be safe than sorry, because it's not just about these men who helped President Trump carry out his policy in his first term," Cotton said on "Fox News Sunday."

"It's about their family and friends, innocent bystanders every time they're in public. It's also about the president being able to get good people and get good advice."

Trump was asked last week whether he would feel responsible if something happened to Bolton or Dr. Anthony Fauci, the former top infectious diseases official who faces politically motivated security threats because of his role in responding to the Covid-19 pandemic.

"No," he replied. A president who escaped two assassination attempts and will be surrounded by Secret Service officers for the rest of his life added: "I think, you know, when you work for government, at some point your security detail comes off."

Republicans who control both chambers of Congress have shown little appetite for checking Trump's power, having declined to convict him in two impeachment trials. And senators who have balked at his controversial Cabinet picks have quickly faced threats of primary challenges.

Sen. Lindsey Graham encapsulated prevailing sentiment about Trump's power when commenting on the case of the dismissed IGs on CNN's "State of the Union" on Sunday. The South Carolina Republican said Trump should have given Congress 30 days notice before ousting the officials, to comply with the law.

But he added: "The question is, is it OK for him to put people in place that he thinks can carry out his agenda? Yes. He won the election. What do you expect him to do, just leave everybody in place in Washington before he got elected?" Graham went on: "This makes perfect sense to me. Get new people. He feels like the government hasn't worked very well for the American people."

The UNRWA cautions to stop its work in Gaza

Michael Jansen

UNLESS there is international intervention, on Thursday, UNRWA, the 75-year-old agency which cares for Palestinian refugees, will cease to operate in Gaza, the West Bank and East Jerusalem. On October 30th, Israel's 120-member Knesset adopted by 92 votes to 10 legislation revoking the 1967 agreement with UNRWA and banning Israeli contact with the agency. Israel will cease issuing agency's staff work and entry permits and halt UNRWA coordination with the army. This allows aid, food, medicine, commercial goods, building and educational materials, and vehicles into coastal strip which has external access only through Israel and Egypt. Since Israel launched all out war on Gaza on October 7th, 2023, UNRWA has become the lifeline of the 2.3 million Gazans who have seen 47,000 of their number die, 110,000 wounded, 11,000 buried beneath of rubble of their homes and 1.9 million displaced.

At the time of writing, newly inaugurated US President Donald Trump has said nothing about UNRWA although he defunded the agency in August 2018 during his

While some UNRWA trucks have entered Gaza, large amounts of its aid remain outside. UNRWA's head of com-munications Jonathan Fowler told Beirut's L'Orient-Le Jour, "Although we have a well-established and unique humanitarian network in the enclave, the many obstacles implicitly and then explicitly imposed by Israeli officials over the past 15 months have affected our ability to act, particularly in the north, where the World Food Programme (WFP) has had to take over for the past 10 months. For the time being, aid deliveries since the cease-fire are being organised by other UN agencies, but in close collaboration with other agencies, including UNRWA."

If the law is enforced, UNRWA's senior emergency officer Louise Wateridge said in an interview with The Guardian that it would be impossible for the agency to distribute aid, particularly if the current ceasefire is not extended and Gaza again becomes a war zone. She warned that Gaza's deeply compromised social order would collapse further and leave Gazans unprotected from armed gangs which have looted aid trucks. "If Unrwa is no longer functioning, UNRWA has the staff, dis-

While Israeli politicians have for many years campaigned against UNRWA, they stepped up their efforts following the 2023 attack on southern Israel by Hamas which killed 1,230 and kidnapped 151. The Israelis have accused UNRWA of collaborating with Hamas, which wrested control of Gaza from Fatah in 2007. In response, Israel clamped a tight siege and blockade on Gaza from land, sea, and air while Egypt granted limited and occasional passage of Gazans through its terminal at Rafah in the south. One Israeli Knesset member accused UNRWA of "educating kids to hate Israel and spreading antisemitism" while a former diplomat said UNRWA IS "a Palestinian organisation fully committed to the Jewish State's destruction." These charges are patently false. Palestinian hostility toward Israel has been caused by its 1948 expulsion of 750,000 Palestinians from their homes in 78 per cent of Palestine during its war of establishment and its occupation of the remaining 22 per cent in 1967. In December 1948, the UN General Assembly adopted resolution 194, paragraph 11, calling for Palestinians to return to their homes and receive compensation for their losses, but this resolution has been dismissed by Israel and ignored by the international community. If Israel had withdrawn from the territories conquered in 1967 as mandated by UN Security Council resolution 242 and a Palestinian state had emerged, UNRWA and allied UN agencies could have shut down after helping exiled Palestinians to return, build infrastructure, homes, public and commercial buildings and develop natural resources and farmland.

According to the UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, 92 per cent of homes, or 436,000, have been destroyed or damaged. Restoring the health system will be a "complex and challenging" task, stated World Health representative Dr. Rik Peepker. Of the strip's 36 hospitals, fewer than half are partially functioning. It's impossible for another agency to replace that." Tens of thousands are sheltering in and around UNRWA schools which formerly educated half a million children.

Instead, Arab Americans can pursue a new strategy, one that focuses on achieving goals that recognize and strengthen Arab and Muslim rights. This would be better than strategies that are driven by emotions over facts.

Many Arab Americans have a misconception that American politicians will support 100 percent of their goals and needs. They won't. American politics is built on compromise. If a politician supports 70 percent of your priorities, that should be an acceptable and positive base from which to build. Arab Americans often want everything at once and shun compromise. If they do not get 100 percent, they feel slighted. Shamed even. Israelis, on the other hand, have generally always taken what they could get – even if it was far less than what they believed they deserved – and built on it. Arab Americans should do the same. The goal is to achieve change, slowly, steadily and through compromise. The choice is simple. Continue to criticize and attack Trump and push him further into the clutches of the Israeli bulldozer. Or be strategic. Keep the doors open to the president, who is one of the most powerful people in the world. Play to his ego and understand the intentions of what he says rather than interpreting the meaning of his rhetoric. American politics is malleable. You can change it by working the system, by being smart.

Biden showed us that taking the word of a friendly political face is meaningless. When it comes down to the critical and most important moment, you want to be in a position to have influence and not be an outsider through your own choice of conflict.

Arab Americans who care about Palestine will work the system regardless of who is in the White House. Those that do not and foment an emotional response really only care about themselves.

Arab Americans and the second Trump presidency

MANY Arab Americans dropped the ball eight years ago, when Donald Trump first entered the White House, as, instead of focusing on their own needs, they were wound up into bitter political polarization. Their mistake was believing that one side, the Democrats, cared more for them than the other, the Republicans. It took Trump's 2020 loss to Joe Biden and the latter's subsequent presidency to expose the truth that neither side would take their concerns seriously.

Under Biden, whose election many Arab Americans celebrated, the Palestinian cause was put on a sidetrack that accommodated Israel's needs. Biden talked about peace and fairness but did nothing to achieve them. He spoke about opening the doors to government to Arab Americans and giving them a voice, but in fact he silenced them.

Biden and his pro-Israel Secretary of State Antony

Blinken ignored the violence committed by Israeli settlers against Palestinian Christians and Muslims and only paid attention to the conflict when Palestinian extremists attacked Israel on Oct. 7, 2023.

There is a huge misconception among Arabs that America has a single standard when it comes to violence in the Middle East and especially in Palestine. That is not true. It is actually two standards: one for Israel and another for Palestine and the Arabs.

Israel's needs are the highest priority for American politicians. That priority overshadows concerns politicians claim they have for US citizens who have needs, such as senior citizens, the homeless and military veterans, and even for fighting crime.

How is that possible? Well, the pro-Israel lobby has one of the most powerful political action committees in America and it places millions of dollars into the campaign coffers of members of Congress.

Seniors, the homeless, veterans and the victims of crime do not have that power, nor do they have a lobby that fights for their rights as successfully as the pro-Israel lobby fights to make Israel America's most important foreign policy concern.

I explain all this because, unfortunately, many Arab Americans are laboring under the misconception that policy decisions are made on the basis of right versus wrong or on the US Constitution and the rule of law. Sorry to disappoint you, but they are not.

The point is that, if you think there is a difference between Biden and the Democrats and Trump and the Republicans, then you are seriously mistaken. And that mistake will only make the situation facing Arab Americans and the issues they care for even worse.

Trump last week issued an executive order targeting extremists who try to enter the US. Some Arab groups immediately denounced it as a restoration of the so-called Muslim ban from his first term. In 2017, Trump issued a visa ban that targeted seven Muslim-majority nations. This move was an extension of a law that was signed off by President Barack Obama two years earlier. In 2015, Congress passed a law that placed immigration restrictions

There is a huge misconception among Arabs that America has a single standard when it comes to violence in the Middle East and especially in Palestine. That is not true. It is actually two standards: one for Israel and another for Palestine and the Arabs. Israel's needs are the highest priority for American politicians. That priority overshadows concerns politicians claim they have for US citizens who have needs, such as senior citizens, the homeless and military veterans, and even for fighting crime. Well, the pro-Israel lobby has one of the most powerful political action committees in America and it places millions of dollars into the campaign coffers of members of Congress. Seniors, the homeless, veterans and the victims of crime do not have that power, nor do they have a lobby that fights for their rights as successfully as the pro-Israel lobby fights to make Israel America's most important foreign policy concern.

Two months later, the Department of Homeland Security expanded it to include three more Muslim-majority countries, Libya, Somalia and Yemen. The administration cited "the growing threat from foreign terrorist fighters" from those countries and the mainstream media pretty much shrugged. The point of Trump's new order is to stop people who have not been properly vetted from entering the US. It targets any country that is in turmoil, witnessing conflict or does not have strong border controls.

So, instead of exaggerating the intent and attempting to fight Trump on it, why not recognize the order for what it is and discuss it in a respectful manner? Trump responds to respect far better than he does to confrontation. He is the president. Arab Americans can throw down the emotional gauntlet and reignite the same confrontation that caused havoc during Trump's first four years, while pretending that Biden and the Democrats were somehow better. But the Democrats were not better. They were just craftier with their rhetoric. Just ask the people in Gaza who suffered immeasurable violence and pain that was funded by the last administration.

Iftikhar Malik calls for single-digit interest rates

LAHORE (APP): Former president SAARC Chamber of Commerce and Industry Iftikhar Ali Malik emphasized that lowering the interest rate to a single digit is essential for reviving the national economy.

In a statement issued here on Tuesday, he highlighted that high interest rates had stifled economic growth with increasing the cost of doing business and due to absence of investors interest.

He argued that a lower interest rate would encourage businesses to borrow, invest, and expand their operations, ultimately leading to job creation and economic development.

A single-digit interest rate, according to Malik, would ease the financial burden on the private sector, particularly small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), which form the backbone of the economy.

Former president SAARC Chamber of Commerce and Industry Iftikhar Ali Malik urged the government and central bank to adopt a pro-growth monetary policy and create a conducive environment for investment instead of lowering rate by one percent.

Iftikhar Malik also stressed the importance of enhancing domestic revenue generation to ensure long-term economic stability.

Former president SAARC Chamber of Commerce and Industry Iftikhar Ali Malik called for bold reforms and effective policy making to restore investor confidence, stimulate economic activity, and place Pakistan on a sustainable path of growth and prosperity.

Construction sector revival must for economic growth: PCJCCI

LAHORE (APP): The construction sector is often referred to as the backbone of Pakistan's economy and its revival is essential for boosting employment, driving economic growth and attracting investment.

Pakistan China Joint Chamber of Commerce and Industry (PCJCCI) President Nazir Hussain expressed these views in a think-tank session held here at PCJCCI Secretariat Tuesday.

He added that this critical sector influences 72 interconnected industries which play a central role in driving economic growth, creating employment opportunities, and attracting significant investments. With the potential to unlock US $100 billion in investments and create millions of jobs, the revival of the construction industry is vital for Pakistan's economic recovery.

He also stressed that supportive government policies will play a crucial role in unlocking the full potential of the construction industry. Tax reductions, affordable mortgage schemes, and streamlined regulatory processes are essential for creating an environment conducive to growth. By addressing sectoral barriers, the government can pave the way for increased investment and industrial development.

These measures, coupled with CPEC's infrastructure projects, will lay the groundwork for sustainable progress, he added.

Senior Vice President Brig. (Retd) Mansoor Saeed Sheikh shared that China-Pakistan Economic Corridor (CPEC) provides an unparalleled opportunity to rejuvenate the construction industry and boost the nation's economy. As a flagship project of the Belt and Road Initiative, CPEC has been a driving force behind infrastructure development in Pakistan. From roads and bridges to industrial zones and housing projects, the partnership between CPEC and the construction industry promises to accelerate growth, attract foreign direct investment (FDI), and introduce advanced technologies.

Additionally, CPEC's focus on enhancing regional connectivity will boost trade and commerce, creating a ripple effect across multiple sectors, he added.

Vice President Zafar

Iqbal said that construction sector's resurgence will have a far-reaching impact, invigorating a wide range of industries such as cement, steel, ceramics, real estate, and IT solutions. Core construction materials, energy providers, interior finishing, and smart technology are just a few examples of the 72 interconnected industries poised to thrive alongside a revitalized construction sector. This interconnected network will generate a multiplier effect, strengthening Pakistan's economic foundation and ensuring long-term resilience.

Secretary General Salahuddin Hanif shared that the revival of Pakistan's construction industry is not just a sectoral priority but it is a national imperative. Its growth will eliminate unemployment, boost industrial output, and enhance the quality of life for millions of Pakistanis.

AI fears weigh on tech stocks, as tariff talk boosts dollar

LONDON (AFP/APP): Japanese tech firms sank Tuesday following a rout on Wall Street after China's DeepSeek chatbot upended the artificial intelligence sector and sparked questions about huge investments by US titans.

The dollar rallied on a report saying Washington was considering universal tariffs on a range of goods, fanning fresh fears about a trade war.

Other Asian equity indices ended mixed in limited trade ahead of the Lunar New Year break.

European stock markets rose in morning deals and oil prices advanced, as traders awaited interest-rate decisions from the US Federal Reserve and European Central Bank due this week.

Tokyo-listed companies linked to the artificial intelligence sector tanked for a second straight day as investors tracked a rout on Wall Street that saw Nvidia crumble 17 percent, wiping more than half-a-trillion dollars off its market capitalisation.

The retreat came after DeepSeek unveiled its R1 chatbot, which has apparently shown the ability to match the capacity of US AI pace-setters for a fraction of the investments made by American companies.

"The DeepSeek news has triggered a rethink on the AI revolution and arguably one of the pillars of the current US exceptionalism," said Rodrigo Catril, foreign exchange strategist at National Australia Bank.

"If R1 is as good as first impressions seem to suggest, then demand for sophisticated chips, infrastructure (think data centres) and energy may not be as large as originally thought."

Nvidia has been the standout company that has led the drive by investors to seek out all things AI, spending vast sums of cash but seeing their share prices rocket.

The US chip firm has piled on about 1,900 percent in five years.

The DeepSeek bombshell also came on the heels of President Donald Trump's announcement of a new $500 billion venture to build infrastructure for artificial intelligence in the United States.

Trump said the release of DeepSeek's model "should be a wake-up call for our industries that we need to be laser-focused on competing to win".

He argued that it could be a "positive" for US tech giants.

"Instead of spending billions and billions, you'll spend less, and you'll come up with hopefully the same solution," he said.

Sam Altman, the boss of OpenAI, which runs lead US chatbot ChatGPT, called DeepSeek "impressive".

Saudi sovereign wealth fund's $4b bond offering four times oversubscribed

RIYADH (Arab News): Saudi Arabia's Public Investment Fund has successfully priced a $4 billion bond issuance, divided into two tranches.

The offering was met with strong demand, attracting global investors and resulting in an order book of approximately $16 billion — four times the initial offering size, said a statement.

According to the statement, PIF issued $2.4 billion in five-year debt instruments and an additional $1.6 billion in securities with a maturity of nine-and-a-half years, under its Euro Medium-Term Note Program.

The sovereign wealth fund confirmed that the proceeds from the bond issuance will be used for general corporate purposes.

The development comes just weeks after PIF closed its inaugural Murabaha credit facility, securing $7 billion in funding. This marks a significant milestone in the fund's broader strategy to raise capital over the coming years.

"Strong demand from international institutional investors underscores PIF's diverse investor base, robust capital-raising strategy, and solid credit profile," said Ahmed Alrobyan, head of public markets, Global Capital Finance at PIF.

He added: "These factors ensure uninterrupted access to global capital markets and are vital to PIF's role in supporting Saudi Arabia's economic transformation."

PIF further emphasized that the oversubscription highlights the effectiveness of its capital-raising approach and reinforces its strong financial position.

In November, credit rating agency Moody's upgraded PIF's rating from A1 to Aa3 with a stable outlook, a move that further underscores the fund's financial strength.

The US-based agency gives Aa3 for entities with high quality, low credit risk, and the best ability to repay short-term debts.

According to Moody's, the upgrade of PIF's long-term issuer rating reflects strong credit linkage between the sovereign wealth fund and the Kingdom's government.

In August 2024, the wealth fund had also obtained a $15 billion revolving credit facility for general corporate purposes from a diverse global syndicate of 23 financial institutions from the US, Europe, and the Middle East as well as Asia.

PIF, at that time, said that this credit facility is offered for an initial period of three years and is extendable for up to two additional years.

A revolving loan is one that can be drawn, repaid and drawn again during the agreed lending period.

PIF manages $925 billion in assets, and is set to increase that to $2 trillion by 2030, a report from monitoring organization Global SWF forecast earlier in January.

Wily Jomel Warrican learns on the go to undo Pakistan

LAHORE (ESPNCricinfo): If you ask ChatGPT, or its newly ascendant competitor DeepSeek, what the perfect Test series looked like, the responses are lengthy, vague, and non-committal. Perhaps one day, when they learn how to limit them to four words or fewer, "Jomel Warrican in Pakistan" would suffice as the perfectly succinct response.

Warrican's dominance of this series has been uniquely legendary. He's taken the most wickets, of course, more than every other West Indian bowler combined. The best bowling figures in an innings, and in a match, belong to him. No one with more than two wickets could boast a better bowling average this his single-digit 9, none managed an economy rate as miserly as his 2.38. For good measure, he also has the highest batting average on either side across the series, the highest strike rate for anyone over 25 runs, and the fourth-highest run tally.

The smattering of Tests he has played in the sub-continent over the past decade have demonstrated his value on spin tracks. But nothing could quite prepare Warrican for what he found in Multan, where, ahead of the series, his captain Kraig Brathwaite had said he had never seen cracks appear this early in his 96-match Test career anywhere else. It gave the spinners more opportunities, but also greater responsibility. It was a responsibility that Warrican and his little band of spinners failed to live up to early on in the first Test. In the first 57 overs of the game, Pakistan had put up 187 runs, with spin managing just one wicket when Gudakesh Motie - who Pakistan believed was a greater threat than Warrican before the series - squeezed Shan Masood down the leg side.

By the time the West Indies spinners made their presence felt, Pakistan already had enough runs, and then never fell behind in the game. Warrican kept trying to find extra rip doing the same thing over and over, but ended the innings with just three wickets, two of them of tailenders.

The intelligence Warrican deployed over the remainder of the series, though, has been anything but artificial. "Speed's very important," he said at the post-match presentation after the second Test, where he was awarded both the Player of the Match and Series. "We worked out that the slower you bowled, the more effective you would be on these wickets. Once I got more information, I used it to my advantage."

From the second innings of the first Test onwards, Warrican was doing things slightly differently. The lines or lengths he was landing the balls at barely changed. But through the air, it was a different story. He fizzed some balls through, held others longer in his hand, and tossed some up. To the right-hander, there was always the danger of the ones that carried on with the arm, making the most instinctively safe shot - the front foot forward defensive - feel uncomfortably perilous. Mohammad Hurraira and Babar Azam were the first two to fall this way in Pakistan's second innings, and Warrican never looked back.

"The variation in pace is effective when you're consistent," he said. "You vary the pace, and hit the same length over and over. The consistency is the key thing to everything in life."

Those were the first two of seven wickets Warrican took that innings, and started a run where he bagged 16 of the 30 Pakistan wickets that fell in the series since. But it wasn't just with the ball that he contributed significantly. Before this series, no side in Test history ever had Nos. 9-11 in their lineup contributing the three highest scores of an innings. In little over four days of cricket, West Indies managed it twice. Warrican was the top-scorer on one occasion, and the second-highest another time.

It wasn't exactly technically soundproof, but he ended up preying on any bowler who viewed him like a classic tailender. He smeared Sajid Khan and Noman Ali away when they pitched the ball up and full; no one hit more sixes than him all series. Warrican's signature shot, though, was the reverse sweep with the back of the bat, one he used like a bludgeon rather than a surgical tool.

Sajid ill-advisedly decided to taunt him on the penultimate day when he missed one of these heaves, getting up close and giving him the "you can't see me" gesture. Warrican appeared unfazed.

"I just back my game plan," he said. "Once the ball is in my zone, I back myself to play it to the boundary. I also trust my defence, and try to rotate the strike. I had belief. I backed us to win the [second] game. The fightback we showed in the second innings, bowling out Pakistan for a cheap total. We knew once we batted well, we were in with a chance to win the game."

In a final twist of fate, it was Sajid who stood at the batter's end when Warrican, and West Indies, needed one more wicket to seal victory. Sajid had tentatively tried to push the ball into the on side, but, just like Babar and Hurraira in the first Test, didn't account for the arm ball. It pierced through the gap between bat and pad, and made a mess of his stumps.

Warrican gave him the same gesture, before raising his right leg and thumping his hand to his thigh: Sajid's own signature celebration. Right to the last moment of the series, it appeared, he had been gaining more information, picking up everything he saw in Multan, and ensuring he left with the last laugh.

Neymar set for Santos after Al-Hilal deal terminated

SAO PAULO (BBC): Brazilian club Santos are in talks to re-sign Neymar after his contract with Saudi Pro League side Al-Hilal was cancelled by mutual consent.

The 32-year-old Brazil record goalscorer is expected to sign a short-term deal at the club where he began his career.

The termination of his contract at Al-Hilal was considered the biggest step, according to sources close to Neymar.

It ends an injury-hit spell in Saudi Arabia, where he played just seven times for the club he joined in a £77.6m deal in August 2023.

The attacker made two appearances this season, most recently as a substitute in November.

Al Hilal said: "The club expresses its thanks and appreciation to Neymar for what he has provided at Al-Hilal, and wish the player success in his career."

Major League Soccer (MLS) club Chicago Fire also attempted to bring Neymar to the United States but he turned them down in favour of returning to Santos.

Fire had Neymar on their 'discovery list', meaning they were the only MLS team able to negotiate with him in the US.

Inter Miami had also been linked with reuniting Neymar with his former Barcelona team-mates Lionel Messi and Luis Suarez.

Neymar remains the world's most expensive footballer after his £200m move to Paris St-Germain in 2017.

Neymar had about seven months remaining on his contract, having joined Al-Hilal on a two-year deal with a reported wage of £129m a year.

He joined claiming he wanted to "write new sporting history", but had a prolonged spell on the sidelines after rupturing his anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) during Brazil's World Cup qualifier against Uruguay in October 2023.

He returned in October last year and although he played down an apparent hamstring issue in his second match back, he has not featured since.

Neymar came through the famed youth system at Santos, where he scored 136 goals in 225 games, before a high-profile move to Barcelona in 2013.

He made 186 appearances across four seasons in Spain, winning two La Liga titles, the Champions League and the Club World Cup before his world-record move to PSG as a 25-year-old.

In Paris he won five league titles prior to his move to Saudi Arabia.

Shortly after the move he overtook Pele to become Brazil's all-time leading male goalscorer with 78 goals, but has not played for his country since his initial knee injury in 2023.

Smith says Australia need to 'be proactive' on Sri Lankan pitches

SYDNEY (ESPNCricinfo): Sometimes it spins. At other times it goes straight. Be ready for both. This is stand-in captain Steven Smith's advice to Australia's less-experienced batters, as he prepares to lead them in a two-Test series against Sri Lanka in Galle. Of Australia's batters on tour, Smith understands the challenge ahead more than most - he has two hundreds in Sri Lanka, and averages 49.75 on the island.

"We have spoken about the differences in the surfaces," Smith said on Tuesday, the eve of the first Test on Australia's ongoing tour of Sri Lanka. "Last time we came, we played on one that spun from ball one and the other one was pretty flat in the first innings, and then spun a lot in the second innings."

"So it's important to have plans for both kind of surfaces. Then if it is extreme from the outset, then you need to be proactive and follow different methods to score runs. You just have to adapt as quickly as possible to what you get."

In 2016, Smith had overseen a tour in which Australia's batters largely failed to pick the slider from the one that turned off the surface, thus going down 3-0 in the series. In 2022, however, their batters fared much better, even winning a Test on the more spin-friendly surface in that series.

Among the more recent trends in countering the kind of spin often seen in Galle has been to focus on run-scoring, rather than on defence. Smith's own 145* the last time he was at this venue was memorable for how quick he was to move around the crease to create scoring opportunities. Reverse sweeps, slogs, paddles around the corner, and more frequent trips down the pitch - these have all become much more commonly employed.

"I think the game has changed a lot since I first came to the sub-continent," Smith said.

"Guys play different shots to put pressure on the bowlers. The game has evolved a lot in the last ten years, and it's good to see some of the shots these guys play to take the game forward."

For Smith, this is a series that will almost certainly feature a major career milestone. He is one run away from becoming the fourth Australia batter to 10,000 Test runs. Smith only needed 38 more runs from the last Test of the home summer - in Sydney - to get to the landmark, but fell for 33 and 4 against India.

"I'll just try to put it out of my mind, to be honest," Smith said of the milestone. "I probably thought too much about it in Sydney. This time I'll just try to forget it and focus on job at hand."

McIlroy 'three goals' from career satisfaction

LONDON (BBC): Rory McIlroy has only three burning ambitions left in the game, and 2025 - with an enticing set of major venues - presents an opportunity to knock off two of them.

As he embarks on his latest season stateside, there is very little the 35-year-old from Northern Ireland has not achieved, amassing what modern jargon would call a vastly impressive body of work since turning pro in 2007.

Pretty much every golfer on the planet would be happy to swap careers.

By a distance he is the UK's most prolific winner on American courses and he is a seemingly permanent fixture in the world's top three.

McIlroy is the pivot around whom Europe enjoys huge Ryder Cup success, appearing in five winning teams from seven contests. He has four majors to his name among more than 40 professional victories, with 26 of those coming on the PGA Tour.

In 2022 he became the first golfer to become a three-time FedEx Cup champion, the American circuit's season-long crown, and on Europe's DP World Tour no current member can touch him with six Race to Dubai successes including each of the past three years.

"I've realised that all I can control is myself," he said. "What's right for me right now is to fully focus on myself and to get the best out of myself and get back to winning the biggest tournaments in the world."

"I've been agonisingly close for the past few years, without being able to get it done and that that is the main focus of this year."

The fact that it is more than a decade since he last added to his list of major victories is one of the most startling statistics in the modern game.

He has achieved pretty much everything else, including winning the prestigious Players Championship in 2019 which was in the days when all of the world's best were competing at Sawgrass for the PGA Tour's flagship title.

But the Players is not a major. His slimmed down 2025 schedule, playing more sparingly in the US, is designed to glean success in the big four events that ultimately define careers.

"All of my practice, all of my prep, even the tournaments that I'm playing, it's all geared towards being ready for those four events," McIlroy said.

"Augusta is Augusta. I've gone through my stats and there are a couple of things that were pointed out to me that I could definitely get better at - certain little shots around the greens."

He famously blew a four-shot final-round lead with a ruinous 80 at the 2011 Masters and he was runner-up without truly contending in 2022. He faded tamely when in the final pairing with champion Patrick Reed in 2018 in another of his four top-five Augusta finishes.

Some observers believe the home of the first major of the year is made for McIlroy's powerful game, but it has a way of finding him out technically and temperamentally.

"I've become a very good US Open player"

The same cannot be said of the venue for the year's second major, Quail Hollow, which will stage the US PGA Championship in May. McIlroy won his first PGA Tour title there 15 years ago and his most recent victory on the US circuit came at the same North Carolina layout only last May. "At Quail Hollow I've played some great golf," he said. "I've won four times there."

"I went up against Xander Schauffele, who went on to win two majors last year, and played some of my best golf in that final round."

McIlroy is also looking forward to competing in the US Open on one of the championship's toughest tracks in Pennsylvania this June, despite missing the cut when it was last played there nine years ago.

$1.8m investment sparks factory growth

MAIDAN (TOLNews): Mohammad Khan Zawak, the head of Industry and Commerce in Maidan Wardak province, has announced the operation of eight production factories with an investment of approximately $1.8 million in this province. These factories are engaged in the production of macaroni, biscuits, oil, and animal feed, creating job opportunities for hundreds of people, he said. The head of Industry and Commerce in Maidan Wardak said, "We hope that the initial work on the industrial park will begin next year and that land will be distributed to industrialists." Some industrialists in Maidan Wardak have called on officials to cooperate in establishing the industrial park and providing the necessary electricity. "If this park is not inaugurated and distributed in Maidan Wardak, we will be forced to go to Kabul or Herat to acquire land," said Abdul Halim Sarwari, one of the industrialists. "I am active in the production of animal feed and cottonseed, from which we produce soap. However, in residential areas, we do not have suitable locations for soap production, and we face many difficulties in carrying out this work," said Muzamel Naseri, another industrialist. Some workers at these factories have called on other investors to invest in the province to create more job opportunities. "We are happy that job opportunities have been provided for us here, and we ask other industrialists to establish similar factories," said Reza Mohammad, one of the workers. "For the youth who migrate illegally to other countries and lose their lives, job opportunities should be provided within the country," said Feroz, another worker. According to local officials, construction of the industrial park is underway on more than 1,000 acres of land in this province, and it is expected to be completed and handed over to industrialists in the next solar year.

Ministry dismiss UN concerns on women rights

KABUL (Amu TV): The Taliban's Ministry for the Promotion of Virtue and Prevention of Vice rejected a new quarterly report by the UN about the human rights situation in Afghanistan, calling it "baseless" and rooted in "Western perspectives." The report highlighted serious concerns about the state of women's rights and freedom of expression in the country. In a statement, the Taliban's PVPV ministry claimed that women's rights in Afghanistan are protected "in accordance with Islamic principles and Afghan values." The Taliban also urged UNAMA to respect "the religious and cultural values of Afghan society" when drafting its reports. UNAMA's report, released on Monday, reviewed human rights conditions in Afghanistan between October and December 2024. It documented the far-reaching effects of the Taliban's restrictive policies, which have deprived nearly 40,000 women of their roles in the healthcare sector. Additionally, 36,000 midwives and 3,000 female students enrolled in medical training have been forced to abandon their education due to the closure of female-only medical institutions. The report also emphasized the severe curbs on free expression and media activities. Female journalists, in particular, face significant barriers, including restricted access to information and fieldwork. UNAMA noted that female reporters are frequently barred from attending Taliban press briefings or relegated to segregated seating areas when allowed to attend. One of the most contentious Taliban policies has been the prohibition of education for women and girls. This ban, enacted since the Taliban's return to power in 2021, has drawn widespread criticism both domestically and internationally. Afghan citizens and leaders of Islamic nations have condemned the policy as contrary to Islamic teachings and Afghan cultural values. In a recent meeting of the Organization of Islamic Cooperation in Islamabad, Mohammad bin Abdul Karim Al-Issa, Secretary-General of the Muslim World League, indirectly criticized the Taliban's restrictions, stating: "Declaring what is permissible to be forbidden is among the gravest sins."

Reactions on suspension of refugee transfers refugees stranded in Pakistan after Trump's suspension of evacuation flights to the US. Nazir Nazari, a migrant rights activist, told TOLNews: "Trump needs to consider the situation of refugees waiting for transfer in neighboring countries and take their problems into account." Meanwhile, several Afghan asylum seekers have urged the Trump administration to reconsider the suspension of the refugee transfer program to the US. Masihullah, an Afghan refugee in Pakistan, said: "Afgans living in Islamabad are facing mental, psychological, economic, and security challenges. Our request to the US government is to address the problems of Afghan refugees." This comes as Donald Trump, after returning to the White House for a second term, signed orders suspending most US foreign aid programs, a move that halted the relocation and resettlement of over 40,000 Afghan citizens to the US.

KABUL (TOLNews): The US Vice President JD Vance, in an interview with an American media outlet, defended Donald Trump's executive order suspending the Afghan refugee transfer program. Vance stressed that the security vetting of some refugee cases before entering the US were not conducted properly. He stated: "I don't agree that all these immigrants or all these refugees have been properly vetted. In fact, we know that there are cases of people who allegedly were properly vetted and then were literally planning terrorist attacks on our country." Meanwhile, Democrat US Senator Amy Klobuchar reacting to Trump's order suspending the Afghan refugee transfer program, stated that the US cannot abandon its "Afghan allies." The senator wrote on X that the order cancels flights for those who fought alongside US forces in Afghanistan. Amy Klobuchar: "The Trump administration is canceling flights for Afghans who fought alongside Americans in uniform." Meanwhile, the British government has announced that it does not intend to resettle hundreds of Afghan

20,000 addicts treated in 2 years: Herat Counter-Narcotics Directorate

HERAT (TOLNews): The Herat Counter-Narcotics Directorate says that in the past two years, nearly 20,000 addicts have been treated in this province. These addicts, who come from various provinces of the country, have returned to normal life after completing their treatment period at the specialized addiction treatment hospital in Herat. Meanwhile, some of the recovered individuals say they will never turn to drugs again. Mohammad Asif, a 50-year-old resident of Badakhshan, is undergoing treatment at the specialized addiction treatment hospital in Herat. He became addicted to drugs in an Iranian prison. Mohammad Asif, who was formerly a pilot for the Afghan Air Force and spent 18 years in an Iranian prison, told TOLNews: "During Doctor Najibullah's era, I trained as a pilot in Tajikistan and had 25 international flights in Afghanistan. But a tragedy led me to the Islamic Republic, where I spent a long time in Iranian prisons. The prison caused me to become addicted to drugs." Many people at the specialized addiction treatment hospital in Herat have had their lives darkened by drugs, like Mohammad Asif. They had been distanced from their families and society due to addiction. "I am a sports champion in Taekwondo, having won medals for Afghanistan from Russia, Pakistan, Bosnia, and Iran. I am a medalist for Afghanistan, bringing medals from four foreign countries," Abdul Karim, an addict undergoing treatment, told TOLNews. "There are many people here who are educated and literate, but drugs have done something that threw them into corners. Drugs distanced them from their families, relatives, society, and God," said Nematullah, another addict under treatment. Hayatullah Rouhani, the director of the Herat Counter-Narcotics Police, said: "Approximately 20,000 addicts have been treated in Herat, who were previously hospitalized in various camps and clinics. It's been about 16 months since we established a state-run hospital here, where they are being treated." According to local officials in Herat, most of the addicts treated in Herat became addicted in Iran. After returning to the country, they were gathered by the Herat Counter-Narcotics Directorate and treated in this hospital.

Taliban administer public floggings in 3 provinces

KABUL (Amu TV): Taliban carried out public floggings of three men in the provinces of Kunduz, Paktika, and Uruzgan, accusing them of "sodomy, theft, and moral corruption." The incidents are part of the Taliban's ongoing use of corporal punishment in public settings, which has drawn sharp international condemnation. In separate statements, the Taliban's Supreme Court said each individual received 39 lashes and was also sentenced to prison terms ranging from six months to six years. The punishments were carried out following the approval of Taliban courts, according to the statements. The individuals were flogged in Aliabad district in Kunduz, Khushmand district in Paktika, and Chenartu district in Uruzgan. Including these latest cases, the Taliban have flogged 31 people, including six women, in various provinces over the past month. Charges have ranged from theft and adultery to "moral corruption." The practice of public corporal punishment has provoked outrage from global human rights organizations, including the United Nations, which has called for an immediate end to such measures. Amnesty International has also expressed concern over the lack of fair trial standards and the inability of detainees to access proper legal representation under Taliban rule.

Agreements signed for 5 lead and zinc mines

KABUL (BNA): The utilization of five lead and zinc mining blocks in Yakawlang, Bamian, is set to commence soon. Mullah Hidayatullah Badri, the Acting Minister of Mines and Petroleum, has signed contracts for the development of these mining blocks with Afghan German, Al-Haramain, Gamma Eagle, Kandahar Khogyani, and Musa Sultan companies. The total investment for the project amounts to 1.797 billion Afghanis. According to a statement from the Ministry of Mines and Petroleum, Mullah Hidayatullah Badri emphasized that the contracts are for five years, conditional on adherence to mining regulations, procedures, and commitments.

The Islamic Emirate holds a 51% share in this project. Additionally, in exchange for extraction rights, the contracted companies will implement developmental projects, including the construction of roads, water and electricity dams, the second and fourth sections of the Khaf-Herat railway, and a teaching hospital.

Taliban hold gathering amid mounting global pressure

KABUL (Amu TV): Facing intensified international scrutiny and recent warnings from senior US officials, Taliban convened a meeting on Tuesday in Kabul titled "National Unity and Stability of the Islamic System." The gathering comes as Taliban continues to face widespread criticism over its human rights record and governance. Noorullah Noori, the Taliban's Minister for Borders, Tribes, and Ethnic Affairs, addressed the event, stating, "The people of Afghanistan have made countless sacrifices for the establishment of the current system." He emphasized the importance of public support for the Taliban government. Aminullah Obaid, the Taliban governor of Kabul, claimed that the Taliban's governance represents a "pure Islamic system unparalleled in the world." He added that Taliban officials are addressing public grievances and remain accessible to citizens, urging the population to support their rule. Mohammad Ali Jan Ahmad, the Taliban's Deputy Minister for Tribal Affairs, echoed these sentiments, calling on citizens to cooperate with the government to safeguard the "Islamic system." The meeting took place against a backdrop of growing global pressure on the Taliban. Last week, Karim Khan, the prosecutor for the International Criminal Court (ICC), requested arrest warrants for senior Taliban leaders, including Supreme Leader Hibatullah Akhundzada and Chief Justice Abdul Hakim Haqqani, accusing them of crimes against humanity, including gender-based persecution. Khan emphasized the involvement of specialized teams and international experts in advancing the investigation. US

Secretary of State Marco Rubio issued a stark warning, referencing reports that the Taliban may have taken American citizens hostage. In a post on the social media platform X, Rubio stated, "If these reports are confirmed, we must immediately announce a far larger reward for the Taliban leadership—greater than what was offered for Osama bin Laden." Rubio's comments and the ICC's actions have sparked widespread debate within Afghan political circles. Rahmatullah Nabil, the former head of Afghanistan's National Directorate of Security, called Rubio's warning "serious," describing it as indicative of mounting international pressure on the Taliban. As the Taliban contend with increasing global condemnation, questions persist over their ability to navigate the challenges of international isolation while maintaining domestic control.

Taliban crack down on shops in Panjshir

PANJSHIR (Amu TV): Local sources in Panjshir Province report that Taliban have been sealing shops that remain open during prayer times, particularly in the Anaba market. Shopkeepers who fail to close their businesses or join communal prayers are also reportedly being detained, sources reported. According to these sources, the Taliban's morality police, known as PVPV enforcers, conduct inspections during the afternoon and evening prayers. Shops found open are sealed, and their owners are sometimes imprisoned. "The Taliban's morality police seal the shops of those who fail to close during afternoon and evening prayers, and they detain the shopkeepers who don't join the prayers," a source said. On Tuesday, the Taliban reportedly sealed a barber shop in the Anaba market for trimming a customer's beard. The Taliban's strict enforcement of their morality law requires men to maintain beards at least first-length and mandates attendance at all five daily prayers in congregation. Senior Taliban officials, including their supreme leader, have emphasized full adherence to these laws. Critics, including human rights advocates and Afghan citizens, argue that these measures severely restrict personal freedoms and subject individuals to harassment, imprisonment, and humiliation by Taliban enforcers. "This law not only infringes on individual liberties but also creates an atmosphere of fear and repression," said a human rights activist. The Taliban's policies, which have drawn widespread criticism domestically and internationally, continue to tighten restrictions on public life, leaving little room for dissent or personal choice.

Bilawal urges businessmen to collaborate with Sindh govt

F.P. Report

KARACHI: Pakistan Peoples Party (PPP) Chairman Bilawal Bhutto Zardari hailed the Public-Private Partnership (PPP) model as a benchmark for driving economic growth and fostering nationwide prosperity. He urged the business community to collaborate with the Sindh government in forging sustainable partnerships. Highlighting the potential for transformative impact, he called on stakeholders to propose "win-win projects" aimed at advancing green energy, upgrading infrastructure, and enhancing essential utility services.

According to a press release issued by the Media Cell Bilawal House, Chairman PPP, while addressing a luncheon held in honor of the business community, appreciated their role in the development of Karachi and the country. He acknowledged the challenges faced by the business community and noted the significant improvements in Karachi's situation compared to pre-2008 conditions. He emphasized that the elimination of extortion, threats, and forced participation in political activities has allowed businesses to operate peacefully, thanks in part to the efforts of the PPP and Sindh Chief Minister Murad Ali Shah.

Bilawal acknowledged the existing challenges and reiterated his commitment to resolving them. He instructed the Chief Minister of Sindh to establish a special cell combining the Anti-Corruption Department and police to address the grievances of Karachi's business community. He urged businesspersons to report specific complaints and name officials involved, instead of making general allegations.

Chairman PPP highlighted his desire for the city's development and prosperity, emphasizing his commitment to supporting businesses. Addressing the traders, he stated, "I have never demanded extortion from you nor asked for donations. Tell me today if you have any complaints against me. Have I ever caused you any trouble? So why would I want anyone else to trouble you in my name or in the name of my government?"

Highlighting his interaction with the trader community, Chairman said that working together can lead to better outcomes. He mentioned that providing employment opportunities to his voters is a part of his manifesto. He emphasized that for the public to have access to job opportunities, it is essential for the country's economy to thrive and for the trader community's businesses to flourish.

While discussing the Public-Private Partnership introduced by the Sindh government, Chairman said that Sindh is the only province where numerous projects under this model are not only running successfully but have also gained international recognition. "I want us to accelerate and further advance this Public-Private Partnership," he added. Referring to projects like the Jhirk-Mullah Katiar Bridge, healthcare initiatives, and Thar Coal, he said that these are not only prime examples of good governance but are also operating profitably and now generating revenue. "I want to explore more win-win opportunities of this nature, where the business community and the Sindh government work together to serve this province," he added.

Bilawal said that being the most populous city in the country, Karachi holds immense potential. He emphasized that all utility service-related issues faced by Karachi can be resolved under public-private partnerships. Highlighting the energy sector, he said that no other province has as much potential as Sindh. Criticizing the determination of electricity tariffs in Islamabad without consulting the business community or the provincial government, he called it a significant issue, adding, "It is you and I who bear the consequences of such policies."

Speaking about investment opportunities in the province, Chairman Bilawal Bhutto Zardari said that Sindh has as much coal as Saudi Arabia has oil. He highlighted that Shaheed Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto envisioned the Thar Coal Project in the 1990s. "Imagine how beneficial it could have been for the country and the nation if Shaheed Bibi's hands hadn't been tied," he remarked. He pointed out that after the dismissal of Shaheed Mohtarma Benazir Bhutto's government, everyone working on the Thar Coal Project, including experts and investors, were subjected to retaliatory actions by the Accountability Bureau.

He urged the need for increased private investment in Sindh's solar and wind energy sectors. Criticizing the federal government, he said, "They shamelessly claim that load-shedding has been eliminated, yet many areas in the country still suffer from power outages lasting up to 18 hours. We have lost confidence that we will ever get reliable electricity from the federal government."

Chairman PPP urged that solar and wind power parks can be established in every division of Sindh. He said that in the event of the federal government privatizing electricity distribution companies (DISCOs), the Sindh government should take over under a public-private partnership, adding that work has already begun on three projects, but more such projects will be included in the next financial year.

Termining water as a critical issue, Chairman Bilawal Bhutto Zardari said that not only Pakistan but the entire world faces the threat of drought and famine due to global warming. He said that providing water to Karachi, given the rapidly growing population, is nothing short of a challenge. He emphasized that, like gas, the province has long been denied its rightful share of water. Pointing out the situation, he said that to meet Karachi's water needs, it was agreed in the 1991 Water Accord that additional water would be allocated to fulfill the city's requirements. However, to this day, not only has the additional water not been provided, but even the complete allocated share has not been delivered.

Qatar reiterates support for two-state solution

DOHA (AFP): Qatar reaffirmed its support for a two-state solution on Tuesday after US President Donald Trump repeated his call to move Palestinians from Gaza to Egypt or Jordan.

Foreign ministry spokesman Majed Al-Ansari did not reveal details of conversations with US officials, but said Qatar often didn't see "eye to eye" with its allies. "Our position has always been clear to the necessity of the Palestinian people receiving their rights, and that the two-state solution is the only path forward," Ansari told a regular media briefing when asked about Trump's comments.

"We don't see eye to eye on a lot of things with all our allies, but we work very closely with them to make sure that we formulate policy together," he added. Qatar, the US and Egypt jointly mediated the Gaza ceasefire and hostage-release deal that went into effect a little over a week ago, halting more than 15 months of fighting sparked by Hamas's October 7, 2023 attack on Israel.

On Monday, Trump repeated his wish to move Gazans to another country, after earlier saying he wanted to "clean out" the devastated Palestinian territory. The US president told reporters he would "like to get them living in an area where they can live without disruption and revolution and violence so much." Ansari said Qatar, which hosts the region's biggest US military base, was "engaging fully with the Trump administration and with envoy (Steve) Witkoff," the president's special representative for the Middle East.

Israel defies UN and vows to cut ties with UNRWA

UNITED NATIONS (AFP): Israel will cease all contact with the UN's Palestinian relief agency UNRWA and any other body acting on its behalf, its UN envoy said Tuesday, after repeatedly accusing the organization of undermining its security.

UNRWA's offices and staff in Israel play a major role in the provision of health care and education to Palestinians, but Israeli officials have long clashed with the agency. UNRWA claims to have brought in 60 percent of the food for the war that followed the October 7, 2023 attacks on Israel.

"The legislation forbids UNRWA from operating within the sovereign territory of the State of Israel, and forbids any contact between Israeli officials and UNRWA," said the envoy, Danny Danon. He was speaking ahead of a UN Security Council meeting on Israel's passage of legislation ending the organization's legal footing in Israel within 48 hours.

"Israel will terminate all collaboration, communication and contact with UNRWA or anyone acting on its behalf," he said. Israel claims that a dozen UNRWA employees were involved in the deadly October 7, 2023 assault, and insists that other organizations can pick up the slack to provide essential services, aid and reconstruction — something the UN disputes. A series of probes, including one led by France's former foreign minister Catherine Colonna, found some "neutrality related issues" at UNRWA — but stressed Israel had not provided evidence for its chief allegations.

The agency's chief Philippe Lazzarini said UNRWA's "capacity to directly provide primary health care for millions of Palestinians, and to resume education for hundreds of thousands of children, far exceeds that of any other entity." He called Israel's actions against UNRWA a "relentless assault" that is "harming the lives and future of Palestinians across the occupied Palestinian territory."

"It is eroding their trust in the international community, jeopardizing any prospect for peace and security," he said. But the United States threw its weight behind the move of its closest Middle East ally, accusing Lazzarini of overstating the impact of the decision. "The United States supports the implementation of this decision," said Dorothy Shea, a United States representative to the UN.

"UNRWA exaggerating the effects of the laws and suggesting that they will force (out) the entire humanitarian response is irresponsible and dangerous," she said. "What is needed is a nuanced discussion about how we can ensure that there's no interruption in the delivery of humanitarian aid and essential services. UNRWA is not and never has been the only option." Hamas's October 7 attack on Israel resulted in the deaths of 1,210 people, mostly civilians, according to an AFP tally based on official Israeli figures.

During the attack, militants took into Gaza 251 hostages. Eighty-seven remain in the territory, including dozens Israel says are dead. Israel's retaliatory offensive has killed at least 47,317 people in Gaza, the majority civilians, according to figures from the Hamas-run territory's health ministry that the UN considers reliable. A ceasefire and hostage release deal between Israel and Hamas is now in place, intended to bring an end to the more than 15 months of war. The fighting provoked a deep humanitarian crisis, destroying hospitals and sparking outbreaks of infectious diseases while hundreds of thousands of Gazans faced starvation conditions and have depended on food aid. "We are determined, however, to stay and deliver until it is no longer possible to do so," said Lazzarini.

PHC grants protective bails to two PTI's MNAs including Asad Qaiser

Humayun Khan

PESHAWAR: A divisional bench comprising of Chief Justice Peshawar High Court (PHC) Justice Ishtiaq Ibrahim and Justice Ijaz Anwar has issued notices to the federal government, seeking a response regarding the disappearance of four brothers from Hayatabad, Peshawar one year ago, on Tuesday.

The petition filed by Gulalai Alkuzai while the counsel Mozzam Butt advocate argued that the four brothers, Muhammad Nasir, Usman Khan, Muhammad Zahir and Abdul Waris, were taken away by unidentified individuals in Law Enforcement Agency's uniform about a year ago. Despite filing a petition earlier, the brothers remain missing.

The petitioners are residents of Hayatabad, Peshawar, and are engaged in business, having invested billions of rupees in Pakistan. The lawyer claimed that the brothers' disappearance is a violation of their fundamental rights, as guaranteed by the Constitution.

The petitioner was pressured to invest Rs. 2 billion in Pakistan for the release of her brothers, which is a violation of Article 18 and Article 11 of the Constitution. The Constitution ensures the freedom to do business, and no pressure can be exerted on individuals in this regard.

The petitioners' lawyer argued that the disappearance of the four brothers has caused immense mental distress to their wives, children, and family members. Their property is also not secure, which is a grave injustice. The state has failed to provide protection to the petitioner under Article 4 of the Constitution. PHC issued notices to the federal government and other relevant authorities, seeking a response after initial arguments.

PHC to issue suitable order on President, PM disqualification plea: A divisional bench comprising of Chief Justice Peshawar High Court (PHC) Justice Ishtiaq Ibrahim and Justice Ijaz Anwar dispose of writ petition seeking the disqualification of the President and Prime Minister of Pakistan for violating their oath to uphold the Constitution, on Tuesday.

The petition was filed by Khalid Shah, who appeared before the court and argued that the current economic system in Pakistan is based on usury, which is prohibited in Islam. He stated that the government's decision to obtain loans from the International Monetary Fund (IMF) was a clear violation of Islamic principles and the Constitution.

The petitioner argued that the President and Prime Minister had taken an oath to uphold the Constitution and Islamic laws, but had failed to do so. The petitioner requested the court to declare the President and Prime Minister ineligible to hold public office, as they had violated their oath and the Constitution.

He also requested the court to order the implementation of an Islamic economic system in Pakistan, which would eliminate interest-based transactions. Shah requested the court to direct the government to make public the details of the agreements signed with the IMF, which he claimed were detrimental to the country's interests.

Meanwhile, PHC directed the petitioner to present his arguments in a detailed manner. The Chief Justice assured the petitioner that the court would hear his arguments patiently and issue a suitable order after considering all aspects of the case.

Serbia's PM resigns as protests raise political pressure

BELGRADE: Serbian Prime Minister Milos Vučević has announced his resignation amid large protests against corruption and President Aleksandar Vucic.

Vučević said at a news conference on Tuesday that he had decided to step down to reduce tensions. Student-led demonstrations have been taking place since the deadly collapse of a train station canopy in the northern city of Novi Sad in November. The prime minister's announcement came as protesters ended a 24-hour blockade at a major intersection in the capital, Belgrade. The previous evening, with political pressure rising, Vučević hinted that he was ready to drop his hardline approach to the demonstrations and negotiate.

"To avoid further complicating things, so we do not further raise tensions in society, I made this decision," Vučević said on Tuesday. Vučević, who was mayor of Novi Sad in 2022 when the reconstruction of the station was launched by a Chinese firm, added that the immediate cause for his resignation was an attack on a female student in Novi Sad early on Tuesday by assailants allegedly from Vučević's ruling Serbian Progressive Party.

"Whenever it seems there is hope to return to social dialogue, to talk, ... it's like an invisible hand creates a new incident, and tensions mount again." He also said the present mayor of Novi Sad, Serbia's second largest city, will also resign. The 50-year-old became prime minister in April after the Serbian Progressive Party won the most votes in elections marred by tensions.

Protesters on Tuesday morning packed up and cleared the Autokomanda junction, where several major roads and motorways come together in Belgrade, after camping out overnight. The blockade followed a call for a general strike on Friday that saw lawyers stop work and small businesses and schools close. The focus of the protests has expanded since November from the canopy collapse to accusations that it was the result of rampant corruption, to calls for an end to Vučević's reign, which has run for more than a decade, and early elections.

Student organisers continued to demand more action, including greater transparency surrounding the investigation into the collapse and the release of all documents linked to the renovation of the train station. More than a dozen people have been charged over the accident, including former Transport Minister Goran Vesic, who resigned days after it occurred. The government has released some documents on the roof collapse, but experts from the Faculty of Civil Engineering in Belgrade said they are incomplete.

Other key demands include dropping charges against protesters arrested at rallies, an end to attacks on demonstrators and increased government spending on education. During the blockade, the largely student protesters were offered protection by farmers and bikers. The demonstrators have faced frequent violence as the rallies have persisted, and at least two have been hit by cars.

Vucic addressed the nation on Monday evening, defending his government's response to the accident in Novi Sad and promising to open dialogue with the protesters. He had previously dismissed them as being controlled by "Western foreign agents". However, the focus now turns to the possibility of snap elections.

Vučević's resignation must now be confirmed by Serbia's parliament, which has 30 days to choose a new government or call snap elections. Pro-government media said Vučević will attend a cabinet session on Tuesday evening to decide whether a new prime minister-designate will be appointed or early elections called. Opposition parties said they would insist on a transitional government that would create conditions for free and fair elections after Vučević has faced accusations of irregularities during past votes. — Aljazeera

Russia, Ukraine forces face off in intense fighting

MOSCOW, KYIV: Ukrainian and Russian forces have reported fierce fighting across the front lines in eastern Ukraine. The Ukrainian military said on Tuesday that its forces were repelling Russian attacks in the Donetsk region while Moscow announced that it had taken control of a settlement in Kharkiv, extending the slow but steady progress it has been making on the front lines over the past year.

Kyiv reported that its forces were engaged in heavy fighting in the embattled towns of Chasiv Yar and Toretsk in Donetsk. "With the support of artillery, the enemy continues to storm our positions at the Kramatorsk and Toretsk sectors," the Khortytysya troop group, tasked with holding ground in key areas of the industrial region, said in a statement on social media.

"Heavy fighting continues in the urban areas of Chasiv Yar and Toretsk," the group added. Ukrainian military bloggers with links to the Ministry of Defence said Russian forces are advancing on the flanks of Chasiv Yar, a strategic hilltop town that was home to 12,000 people before the war. Toretsk is one of a string of mining towns in the Donetsk region, and Russian forces have been fighting for months to capture it.

The Ministry of Defence in Moscow said Russian troops have "liberated" the settlement of Dvorichna in Kharkiv. The village, which is located across the strategic Oskil River and had a pre-war population of more than 3,000, was seized by Russian forces at the start of their full-scale invasion of Ukraine in 2022 before being retaken by Kyiv months later in a swift counteroffensive. But Ukraine's army has been pushed back over the past year, outgunned and out-manned by Russia's forces across the 1,000km (600-mile) front lines.

Meanwhile, both sides continue to launch drones and missiles across their shared border. Russian air attacks wounded eight people, set a private business on fire and damaged residential buildings around Ukraine, local officials said on Tuesday. Attacks were reported in Kharkiv and in the Black Sea port of Odesa, among other places. Ukraine's air force said it shot down six drones while 28 drones did not reach their targets, two returned towards Russia and Belarus, and one remained in Ukrainian airspace. — Aljazeera

Govt to auction surplus electricity: Power Minister

F.P. Report

ISLAMABAD: Federal Minister for Power, Sardar Awais Leghari, on Tuesday announced the government's plan to auction surplus electricity in the country.

Addressing an event here in Islamabad, he said this surplus electricity will be provided to the industries. The Minister said this initiative aims to stimulate industrial growth and create new employment opportunities across Pakistan. He emphasized that surplus electricity would be made available competitively to ensure maximum benefit for the economy and the industrial sector.

The Minister also discussed the recently introduced National Electric Vehicle (EV) Policy, which aims to encourage the adoption of electric vehicles across the country. He said electricity tariffs for EV charging stations have been significantly reduced to make electric vehicles more affordable and accessible for the public.

This step aligns with the government's vision of promoting sustainable energy solutions and reducing environmental impact. Awais Leghari highlighted several other reforms in the energy sector, including efforts to reduce electricity tariffs, eliminate circular debt, and address inefficiencies in the current pricing system, which he described as unsustainable. Talking about IPPs, he said that agreements with Independent Power Producers (IPPs) are being revised to ensure transparency and sustainability, and similar revisions will be made with government-owned IPPs in the next phase.

The Minister announced that by 2025, the government would no longer over-see electricity trade. Instead, consumers and power companies will directly negotiate electricity purchases, fostering competition and benefiting all stakeholders. He also mentioned that industrial estates and economic zones would soon have the autonomy to manage their own power distribution systems. This initiative will curtail inefficiencies and promote industrial activity. He highlighted that privatization of electricity distribution companies is also underway, and efforts are being made to reduce the tax burden on electricity consumers.

Discussing coal-based power plants operated by Chinese companies, the Minister said these plants would transition from imported coal to locally mined coal from the Thar region. This shift will reduce import costs while utilizing domestic resources effectively, supporting the local economy and promoting energy self-reliance.
