NAB recovers Rs 547bn in 6 months

LAHORE (APP): The National Accountability Bureau (NAB) achieved record-breaking recoveries in the first half of 2025, reclaiming Rs 547 billion in looted national wealth and compensating thousands of fraud victims.

The figures were revealed in NAB's midyear performance report, issued here on Saturday. Under the vision and guidance of Chairman NAB, the Bureau is working tirelessly against corruption and committed to safeguarding public interests.

According to the report, NAB recovered Rs456 billion between April and June alone. It also restored movable and immovable properties worth Rs532 billion to various federal and provincial ministries, departments, and financial institutions. During the same period, Rs12,611 victims of different fraud cases received their misappropriated funds back.

Regional offices played a major role in these achievements. NAB Lahore recovered eight properties worth Rs3.9 billion in the Pak-Arab Housing Case, to be liquidated for distribution among 2,500 victims, and disbursed Rs3.2 billion in the fifth installment of the Eden Housing Case to 11,880 victims.

NAB Rawalpindi retrieved 51 kanals of prime land in Islamabad's Sector E-11, valued at Rs29 billion, for the Capital Development Authority (CDA), and secured Rs3 billion in the B4U Ponzi scheme case, earmarked for 17,214 victims.

PHC issues notice to FIA F.P. Report

PESHAWAR: The Peshawar PHC has issued a notice to the Director FIA in response to a petition filed by a commission agent, Fazal Elahi, challenging the reopening of a closed inquiry under the Anti-Money Laundering law.

The inquiry against Fazal Elahi was initiated in 2021 but was later closed by the FBR as no evidence of money laundering or illegal activities was found. The petitioner works as a commission agent and imports vehicles for overseas clients under the SRO regime, the lawyer said.

The petitioner's lawyer, Mukhtar Maneri Advocate, argued that the FIA's decision to reopen the inquiry after five years was unjustified and without any new evidence. He contended that the petitioner had been cleared of any wrongdoing in the initial inquiry, and reopening the case would cause undue harassment.

PHC divisional bench comprising Justice Syed Arshad Ali and Justice Farah Jamshed issued a notice to the FIA Director.

PASCO negligence led to fungus attacks on wheat

HAFIZABAD: Negligence and carelessness by officials and staff at the PASCO center in Kaleke have reportedly resulted in millions of rupees worth of wheat being infested with fungus and insects. Locals allege that instead of disposing of the spoiled grain, the officials have begun drying it and selling it for public consumption, a move that could expose the poor to serious diseases. The revelations have sparked a wave of anger among public and social circles.

According to reports, during the recent spell of heavy rains, PASCO officials failed to take appropriate precautionary measures at several procurement centers, including those in Sukheke, Kot all government buildings, Sarwar, and Kaleke. As a main squares, intersections, result, large stocks of wheat roads, and key public places stored at these locations were submerged in water, rendering them unfit for human consumption.

At the Kaleke center, the wheat not only suffered water damage but also became infested with fungus and insects. Residents claim that the spoiled grain is being dried and redistributed instead of being destroyed, thereby endangering public health.

Outraged citizens have called on senior PASCO authorities and the provincial government to take immediate notice, hold those responsible accountable, and ensure that fungus-contaminated wheat is not supplied to the public.

Georgia jails journalist for slapping police chief

International

BILISI (Reuters): Georgian court sentenced journalist Mzia Amaglobeli to two years in prison for slapping a police chief in a case seen by activists as symbolic of diminishing freedoms in the South Caucasus country. Amaglobeli, a founder of two independent media outlets, was convicted by a court in Batumi, Georgia's second city, for slapping the official during a protest in October. A video of the incident, published by Georgian media, shows her engaged in heated conversation with the police chief, Irakli Dgebuadze, before slapping him lightly across the face. Her defenders say it was not serious enough to constitute assault under Georgian law. The New York-based Committee to Protect Journalists called the sentence "outrageous". In court this week Amaglobeli called the charges "malicious" and "insulting", according to Georgian media.

Unexpectedly, the judge downgraded the charge from assaulting a police officer to using violence against a protector of public order, which carries a lighter sentence. Georgia, previously one of the Soviet Union's most democratic successor states after winning independence in 1991, has been roiled by more than a year of protests against the ruling Georgian Dream party, which critics say is steering the country in an authoritarian and pro-Russian direction Amaglobeli's allies say her treatment contrasts with the failure to prosecute those behind a violent crackdown on protesters last year.

A joint statement by 24 Western diplomatic missions including European Union countries, Canada and Britain condemned Amaglobeli's sentencing and the "escalating intimidation of journalists". Among those present in the courtroom were diplomats from the European Union and Germany, France and Poland, as well as former Georgian President Salome Zourabichvili, a critic of

Trump remade global trading system

RESIDENT Donald Trump has remade the global trading system. He's just getting started. Trump's "reciprocal" tariff regime went into effect just after midnight, solidifying the new world order fueled Trump's long-standing - and oft-doubt-ed - aspiration to reorient seven decades of global commerce. But the days leading up to this moment provide a window into a president who advisers tell CNN is increasingly emboldened, confident and unyielding in his belief that his unprecedented use of tariffs for, well, just about everything, hasn't carried any downside.

It's a view corporate executives, foreign leaders and a veritable phonebook worth of economists would hotly dispute, citing an array of warning signs in underlying economic data, earnings calls and geopolitical maneuvering. Trump is unbowed and set to aggressively expand his imprint on a new global system of trade in the weeks ahead. "Tariffs are his Swiss Army Knife - there's isn't a single thing that cross his desk that can't be solved by their utility," a senior administration official told CNN. "I think the experience of the last few months has proven that approach correct - and probably made the Swiss Army Knife more of a Swiss Army chainsaw." Trump's reciprocal tariffs are now in place, as are tariffladen bilateral trade frameworks with countries that make up roughly 60% of the world's gross domestic product. Steel, aluminum, copper, auto and auto parts sector tariffs are active as well. Soaring sector-based levies on semiconductors, pharmaceuticals, lumber, critical minerals, aircraft, poliysilicon and trucks are in process and will be rolled out in the coming weeks. The exact dates appear almost entirely up to Trump and his trade teams. The actual rates for those sector tariffs? Same, but by all accounts, only moving upward by the week with Trump recently setting the level for chips and semiconductors at "approximately 100%" and threatening up to 250% for pharmaceuticals. The official was relaying the observation about Trump's all-purpose use of tariffs on steroids at roughly the same time the Swiss president, who had scrambled to Washington in a lastditch effort to avoid Trump's soaring new tariff rate on her country, was departing the capital Wednesday without a deal in hand. It was a rather colorful - if telling coincidence.

World leaders and their trade teams scrambled to cut deals to ease new rates, only to be rebuffed. Business leaders or their highly-paid Washington sherpas insisted there were clear opportunities to secure exemptions and carveouts but have discovered there would be no easy path. "Trump is always listening, always taking offers," one lobbyist. "But yesterday's price is not today's price based on my sense of things - he wants big numbers, big commitments, big demonstrations of success." Hundreds of billions of dollars in corporate pledges and investment commitments have served as Trump's most coveted elements of bilateral trade framework, officials say. Trump has specifically cited those commitments as a way countries could "pay down" the threatened tariff rates. Trump's advisers have formulated plans to utilize those commitments to shore up US supply chain weaknesses and vulnerabilities. The structure, while still very much a work in progress and subject to some dispute between the US and counterparts, serves as an innovative and certainly unprecedented vehicle to address national security concerns in critical industries and products, officials say Trump's view of the investment commitments is framed in a somewhat different manner.

"If you look at Japan, we're taking in $550 billion, and that's like a signing bonus that a baseball player would get. They give a signing bonus of a million dollars, or $2 million or $20 million, or whatever the hell they give today," Trump said this week on CNBC. "So I got a signing bonus from Japan of $550 billion. That's our money. It's our money to invest, as we like." In other words, Trump wants exactly what Apple CEO Tim Cook provided in the Oval Office on Wednesday with the announcement of a new commitment to invest $100 billion in US jobs and suppliers. The customized glass and 24-karat gold statuette that Cook theatrically unveiled in the middle of the announcement didn't hurt either Trump, just hours before he and Cook appeared together in the Oval Office, slapped 25% tariffs on India for their purchases of Russian energy. That levy, should it go into effect in three weeks, would raise US tariffs on all imports from India to 50% - one of the highest levels world-wide. The underlying reason for Trump's escalation, despite the predicate of depriving Putin's war machine of critical cashflow, was India's refusal to drop nearly all of its tariffs to US producers, multiple officials told CNN. Punishing tariffs on India, where Apple has a significant manufacturing footprint, would seem to be a major problem for a CEO like Cook.

But White House officials made clear that in the near term, existing exemptions on specific technology products meant Apple wouldn't take a hit in the near term. Trump, in an unexpected announcement during the event, made clear those exemptions would stand for the long term, too. "We're going to be putting a very large tariff on chips and semiconductors, but the good news for companies like Apple is, if you're building in the United States, or have committed to build, without question, committed to build in the United States, there will be no charge," Trump said. There are no shortage of questions about the final shape of the trillions in investment commitments outlined in corporate pledges and the trade frameworks with foreign counterparts. There is significant technical and legal work ahead on the bilateral frameworks, which were in many cases revised and reshaped by Trump's own hand in Oval Office sit downs and are now subject to some dispute in foreign capitals. But Trump's advisers hardly seem concerned about their ability to finalize the terms in the months ahead. "The method to hold countries and the companies in these countries to their commitments is, of course, the tariffs, the senior administration official said.

But these issues have a just signed away our right to common thread: government ineffectiveness and 65 per cent of voters the fact that the government up to the job. The previous Conservative government, exhausted after an orgy of before seen in this country, became a purveyor of palliatives, almost a commentator on the country's difficulties, part of the problem rather than the solution. Labour promised something different. But almost immediately their own authoritarianism, their woeful out-of-touchness with the country, and now the alternately Leftist and damagingly progressive predilections of their own backbenchers position. Once again, everything is too difficult to handle. The underlying reason for this is that, during the long years of EU membership, our political establishment forgot how to run the country. They looked outwards to Brussels and to international institutions for help. Gradually it became easier to outsource decision- trol. making than think hard about anything themselves. Even now, most are happier deferring to the European Court of Human Rights than exercising real control. In short, most of our leaders have simply forgotten how to define the British national interest and pursue it.

This is why Labour keep telling us leaving the EU has been damaging and we must move back into its orbit. Unfortunately they have been offered the perfect backdrop for this argument by the mess the country is in. So it is not surprising, perpropter hoc. Leaving the EU may have preceded our current problems, but it is not the cause of them. Rather, it is a necessary step towards solving them. Having taken back control, it must now be exercised. As so often, the British people are clearer about this than their leaders. And an important YouGov poll this week, led by Dr Richard Johnson of Queen Mary University London, shows this unambiguously. The poll deliberately excluded any mention of the EU or Brexit, since these polarising terms tend to distort opinion by putting people immediately on their "team". Instead, it aimed to test real opinions about where power should sit. Voters were asked neutrally whether they thought that decisions across 20 policy areas, all largely or entirely subject to EU control while we were a member, should be taken by the tional institutions, or a mix. The answer was clear. Across all 20 areas, an avercent if you take out don't knows) of all voters wanted policies decided by the

But Labour is doing immigration; a public the reverse. Its so-called order problem exemplified "reset" with the EU is based by the illegal protest this on a fallacy - the belief that Much current including a majority of frustration and fragility in every party including the British society stems from Greens - think that the UK Government should control and the permanent state them. They have signed apparatus don't seem to be away our fishing grounds, but 55 per cent of voters think fishing policy should be decided by the UK. They state authoritarianism never defer to the ECHR on immigration, but 58 per cent of voters think the British Government should have the final say here too. That 58 per cent is a particularly relevant number in the week that the UK-France agreement on returns was ratified (in secret, by the way). That treaty, which enables us to return a few small boats arrivals in return for accepting a similar number of French asylum seekers, effectively outsources conhave put them in the same trol. The French can refuse anyone we want to return, but will tell us nothing about the people they want to send to us. The YouGov poll says that 67 per cent of voters think this country should be able to refuse entry to foreigners who have been in prison - but France now decides whether we can actually exercise that con-

The agreement is of course - we have come to expect this - almost laughably biased against Britain in other ways. We must meet all the costs of returns in either direction. France can refuse anyone with outstanding human rights or other claims in our justice system. And the number of returns they will accept is not even in the treaty and is, apparently, a closely guarded state secret. Labour's customary flaccid approach to EU negotiations delivered the same result here as it did in the reset. But - as we learnt haps, that we get opinion under Theresa May - if you polls telling us that Britons signal you won't walk away, would now vote to Remain you inevitably get a bad after all. But post hoc is not agreement. How depressing it is that our leaders still have not learnt, or do not care to learn, that lesson.

The message of this week's poll is that Labour are walking on thin ice. Whatever the current political vibes, the majority of the British people are not up for signing away the powers Boris Johnson and I painfully won back in 2020. That's why we are right to keep trying to stop them. There is a wider lesson too for the Right. You don't stop fighting the war until you have won it. There is a political market to reverse the reset and to finish the job that was largely, but not entirely, done in 2020: in short, to make the UK including Northern Ireland a fully selfgoverning state once again. under our own parliament, setting our own laws. This week's poll shows the British people want our government in charge and actually exercising the powers they now have. The party that understands why that is important and necessary, age of 60 per cent (70 per unites behind it, and campaigns for it, is the one that will succeed.

wants to stop the senseless killing of thousands of young people every week. Trump also wants to end a war that believes his predecessor Joe Biden enabled and cement his legacy as a peace president. Aside from these sentimental and egoistic reasons, Trump also has a geostrategic rationale for ending the war in Ukraine. The Trump administration wants to redirect its focus on winning the spiralling geopolitical confrontation against China. It sees peace in Europe as a prerequisite for that reorientation and regards Russia as a potentially useful partner in the US's containment efforts against China. escalations of the early spring. Trump's closest allies have tried to spin these concessions as shows of strength against China. AI advisor David Sacks argues that easing export restrictions will make China more dependent on US chips and blunt its competitive edge. Nonetheless, the perception lingers that Trump is trying to appease China and appears more eager than President Xi Jinping to have an in-person meeting on a comprehensive trade deal. The Trump administration is convinced that ending the Ukraine war will give the US the bandwidth to pursue a Trump has eased export more confrontational stance on its diminished influence in towards China. chains to follow suit. As the US sharpens its decade-and-a-half-long defensive pivot to Asia, Trump sees Russia as a potential long-term partner. The case for a "reverse Kissinger" courtship of Russia based on Moscow's latent frustrations with economic overdependence on China and the surrender of great power status that accompanies to it. proposals for Arctic cooperation with the US and enticing promotions of Russian rare earth metals align with Trump's world-view.

The geo-strategic vision that underpins Trump's pursuit of peace in Ukraine is not without its logical fallacies. While most Russians still see themselves as European, Russian foreign policy is firmly enmeshed with the collective non-West. This makes diluting Russia's partnership with China and courting the US a difficult proposition. The perception that Trump is willing to reward Russian aggression in Ukraine could embolden China, even if US containment efforts towards Beijing intensify after a peace deal. Trump's combination of economic threats and diplomatic engagement with Russia align with his time-tested playbook. They could be the stepping stone for a new China-centric era in US foreign policy.

Epstein victims are a growing political threat to Trump

Epstein abused demand to be heard. And their voices long suppressed, but now emerging powerfully and with courage could further fuel the maelstrom around President Donald Trump and aides who dig the scandal deeper each time they try to end it. These are women who've been let down for years, at multiple levels, by a government that was families are victims, too, since

And it's happening again as the Trump administration refuses to release files about Epstein's life, which several of its members had promised to make public. CNN has reported that Attorney General Pam Bondi briefed Trump in May that his name was mentioned in the files, among those of other high-profile figures. Trump has never been investigated or charged over anything to do with Epstein, whom he knew in the 1990s and early 2000s. The White House says Trump threw Epstein out of Mar-a-Lago because he was "a creep." But hardly anyone at the White House ever mentions the young women whom Epstein used and abused.

'What they really need is for it to go away," Sky Roberts, the brother of one of Epstein's most prominent victims, Virginia Giuffre, told CNN's Erin Burnett on Thursday. "There's a lack of transparency here and what we are not hearing is ... we are not hearing the survivors' voices coming through," Roberts said. "This is a human issue, and I think we need to bring that back because we are dehumanizing survivors by not bringing justice forward." Giuffre took her own life in Australia, where she lived, earlier this year. One Epstein accuser, Annie Farmer, told CNN's Kaitlan abuse sows trauma through gen-Collins on Thursday that she had reached out to Deputy Attorney General Todd Blanche - who spent two days interviewing Epstein's jailed accomplice Maxwell last month - but had not heard back. Some victims and their families view the meeting as a political maneuver to find a way to refocus attention away from Trump. "I hate that it has been politicized

the way it is because I think we lose sight of the bigger picture in that," Farmer said on "The Source." "I think this is really about people using their power to harm others, and that is not a political issue, Farmer said, referring to Epstein's past conduct. "I think people on both sides care about the safety of children and I really hope that Trump understands that a message is being sent beyond just the individuals involved in this case to the wider community about the seriousness of these types of crimes." The question now is whether survivors and their families can coalesce as a political force as they seek to influence the administration's decisionmaking - even if they are seldom mentioned by MAGA media. Can they secure the recognition of which they were so often deprived by the justice system? Will their influence further complicate a controversy that the White House has downplayed and dismissed but that keeps growing? And could they add a new dimension of political exposure for House meeting that addressed the a White House so far mostly con- mysteriously, Maxwell was moved crisis, CNN reported. It's nothing new that the powerful are ignoring the victims. It's been running on repeat for years. As young girls, these women were victimized by Epstein, a disgraced financier, in a sordid web of soliciting, abuse and underage sexual exploitation. They were also victimized by Maxwell, his onetime paramour, who was sent to prison for 20 years for grooming Epstein's young female victims - and abusing some herself. They were victimized by a lenient Florida plea deal in 2008 that allowed Epstein, an accused sex trafficker, to escape federal charges and a possible long prison term. He used the time he got back to perpetrate more horrendous

The opposite is true. Trump, increasingly agitated as the Epstein fallout drowns out his presidency, keeps blasting the entire Epstein drama as a "hoax" in remarks that only makes the anguish worse. He even called it B.S. on Wednesday. "It's not a hoax," Roberts told Burnett on Thursday, his voice breaking. "I think it's pretty clear that these survivors are not a hoax. These are people. It hurts. They are still healing. They had something taken from them that they can never get back.

The White House has tried other ruses to make the scandal go away. It has asked a judge to release grand jury testimony about the Epstein case, apparently hoping to slake demands for transparency by MAGA influencers. But the material is only a fraction of what the Justice Department controls. Then Blanche, Trump's former personal lawyer, interviewed Maxwell. Then, cy for a sex offender. This fueled warnings of a cover-up, since Maxwell has an incentive to help Trump politically: He has the power to pardon her or improve her condi-

The contempt for the victims is 'outrageous," Jennifer Freeman, a lawyer for some of those abused by Maxwell, told CNN's Collins on Wednesday. "When the voices are so strong from everyone else except for them. They're not given any attention whatsoever." Freeman lamented that those caught up in the Epstein political saga have been ignoring the survivors over and over .... (in) one of the largest law enforcement failures in US history.' The disrespect keeps on coming. In an interview with Newsmax last week, Trump was asked why Blanche met with Maxwell. "We'd like to release everything, but we don't want people to get hurt that shouldn't be hurt, and I would assume that was why he was there,' Trump told Newsmax a week ago. His remark was ambiguous. But it seemed to prioritize people who came into contact with Epstein, including himself, rather than those who have already been hurt - the victims. CNN reported this week that audio tapes were made of the Maxwell interview and that officials are considering releasing a transcript. There is no indication of wrongdoing by Trump in his dealings with Epstein, Maxwell or in any other area of the case. He has never been charged or investigated. But there is growing scrutiny over how often he's mentioned in the Epstein files held by the Justice Department. Some victims want all of the Epstein files publicly released so any men who associated with the accused sex offender must account for what they knew about his activities. But they fear what will happen with Maxwell and the pardon that Trump keeps saying he has the constitutional authority to grant. Such an outcome would be another to a much more comfortable prison betrayal of those who have suffered to lose if the EU and China were to form a strategic partnership or even a major free trade zone, which could later be joined by the rest of the US-targeted economies. It is important to understand that, unlike the tariff wars of the 1930s during the Great Depression, this is not a conflict of all against all, but rather of one country, the US, against the rest of the world. Therefore, the rational response should be coordinated action by the rest of the world against the US, following coordination between the two largest trading partners, the EU and China. But since the EU has always imported more from China than it has exported, its trade deficit with the Asian giant has been widening. To reduce its trade deficit, the EU could divert some of its potentially USdestined exports to China, and ensure the diversion is greater than any diversion of China's potentially USdestined exports to the EU. But Harris and her team declare have squandered these advantages in record time. They have demonstrated no coherent plan and no political sense. They don't appear to have any allies in the media or the punditry.

Her brief flirtation with running for governor of California is emblematic of her incoherence. Running for major office is not like buying a used car. You either want it or you don't. If Harris truly wanted to plant herself in California and be governor, her pause to "consider" running would have been a delaying tactic to plan her announcement and her campaign. Instead, it appears that dropping out of sight was her way of preparing to announce basically nothing.

Does Harris realize she just called herself out for being weak and absent? Trump's disapproval rating among Democrats is 93 percent. Yet Harris just declared herself AWOL. The big problem for Harris is the same problem Joe Biden faced after his disastrous debate in June 2024: It's not so much the current moment that is the problem - it's the future. With Biden, there was no chance he could have made it through the campaign - debates, public appearances, speeches. With Harris it is the same thing. With the nomination dropped in her lap, she completely choked on the two most critical decisions.

First, she chose as her running mate perhaps the only Democratic politician more inept than herself. Tim Walz brought nothing to the ticket - not even Minnesota, which was closer in 2024 than it had been in 2020. Harris could have picked Pennsylvania Governor Josh Shapiro, a much better vote-getter than Walz, but the howls from the most leftist parts of the party were too loud. Second, she failed to

But again, she choked. And this is what will sink any chance she ever had of becoming the nominee for a second time. Harris is just not a risk-taker. She is petrified of angering any part of the squabbling Democratic Party, even the muchdiscredited Biden and his hangerson. She crumbles in the face of any loud faction and tries to please everyone while saying nothing.

Harris has missed the moment. By not breaking with Biden, she ing to figure out what to do, other EU's Global Gateway strat-Democrats are charging forward, making their own plans. Nobody is intimidated by her. Even the Biden inner circle - who should be cast out of Democratic politics permanently - have threatened to sink her if she dares criticize them.

The nerve of Team Biden is pretty incredible. Even after an avalanche of books ripping Biden's White House staff to shreds, they have no qualms about threatening Harris. And, of course, Harris dutifully defended Biden in her Colbert interview. Pathetic. The true test for any politician is to work without a net Kamala Harris has proven not break with Biden. ### A Quixotic quest to reindustrialize US

the US administration's all imports with additional tar- cards, student loans, and mortiffs on steel, aluminum and copper - is a bold economic maneuver aimed at reviving US manufacturing. In reality, it's less policy and more pageantry. A theatrical drama steeped in nostalgia for a bygone industrial age. The Quixotic US administration percent, squeezing decimated grois jousting at windmills, mistaking them as economic demons growing trade deficits, other countries' manufacturing effi- those for imported repair parts ciency, and the erosion of the Like Miguel de Cervantes' misguided hero, the US administration on the US administration's voter is tilting at illusions, clinging to the belief that tariffs can resurrect factories, restore jobs and bring back the "golden era" of US manufacturing. But this quest, weighed down by sentiment and devoid of strategy, will ruin, not revive, the US economy.

'American dream''.

Tariffs are often used as a defense, an economic shield. For neglected ecosystem that would developing countries desperate to protect nascent industries, they can help boost their economies, as China has demonstrated. But for developed countries reliant on global supply chains, tariffs are a blunt instrument, a regressive tax that eviscerates household budgets and disrupts trade. When the US unilaterally imposes 15-50 percent tariffs on imports, other countries don't foot the bill; US consumers do. According to the Yale Budget inflate consumer prices by 2.3 percent, hitting families with an aver- would protect 1,800 jobs but cost age income of $3,800 in added consumers $815,000 per job.

> These aren't symbolic sacrifices; they're debilitating attacks base: rural voters, Rust Belt communities, and blue-collar workers who believed in its promises to control prices and build a "new golden age". The White House claims tariffs will "bring jobs back" but the math doesn't add up. US manufacturing isn't a faucet you can turn on whenever - it's a require almost $3 trillion and 20+ years to revive.

For example, 41 percent tariffs might revive the textile sector, but US labor cost is five times that in China and almost 29 times that in Bangladesh. And consumers will have to pay 17 percent more for clothing with no net job gain. More importantly, reviving the industry would require millions of low-wage workers, which the US lacks. As for the US steel and alu-Lab, the US' 2025 tariffs will minum sectors: 50 percent tariffs competing with other leading on imported steel and aluminum countries in automation would plant was built in the US 40 years ago. Also, 25 percent tariffs on Mexican-made cars could boost automobile assembly in the US but raise input costs, crippling export strophic. Apparel prices have competitiveness, while in the agriculture sector, subsidies could delay farm bankruptcies but shrink export markets, and the dearth of labor, as immigrants are hounded out of the US, will raise consumer prices. In electronics, reshoring $140 billion in computer imports would require at least $500 billion investment in semiconductor plants, which at best is a decadelong endeavor.

On the other hand, the US' CHIPS and Science Act would spur fabrication plant construction, but delay the implementation and completion of projects. The US administration's claims remind us of reverse economic alchemy turning gold into lead, with shortterm gains (jobs, production) obscuring long-term losses from higher prices, inefficiency and retaliation. As the American Tax Foundation, an independent nonaligned tax policy institute, said, tariffs reallocate resources to less productive sectors, dragging down wages and GDP.

The claim of factories being reborn collides with logistical realities. For instance, factory wages in the US are five times that in China, 6.6 times that in Russia, 19.2 times that in India and 68.7 times that in Bangladesh. And require the US to develop and install robots, a race China is already leading. Worse, Apple's 1,200 foreign suppliers cannot be repatriated even in a couple of decades, and thus the US cannot control the entire global supply chain. A genuine reindustrialization of the US would require more than $10 trillion in subsidies over 20 years and a labor force that is willing to accept lower wages amid growing automation, which the US is not in position to fulfill. This will give rise to more economic uncertainties that are already reducing private business investment, and increase the US' already growing debt pile. In its crusade, the US administration has forgotten that manufacturing jobs in the country peaked in 1979, and was sacrificed in exchange for strengthening the dollar and boosting Wall Street profits, and that tariffs don't shrink imports; they shift them, for example, from China to Vietnam. The result? Higher costs for Walmart shoppers, not Chinese consumers. The US administration is taking aim at the windmills - the global economic engines of trade and development - because it believes they are the evil giants posing a threat to the US.

The US administration believes that it is "making America great again" by imposing tariffs on imports from its trade partners, but in reality, it is championing the wealthy at the expense of ordinary Americans. Don Quixote is charging at windmills believing he is saving America, without realizing that factories won't return to the US, and the economic windmills across the world will keep

Trump is exposing just how weak Keir Starmer really is

Nile Gardiner

ING Charles will host Freedom at Windsor host President be greatly embarrassing to Castle for an unprecedentthe Prime Minister, who ed second state visit in appears to be rapidly losing September, a recognition of the importance of the US-UK Special Relationship. This is a huge honour for the president, and a great moment for Trump's second term. The Sept 17-19 dates of the visit, however, fall when the House of Commons will not be sitting, thereby denying the president the opportunity to address Parliament, an honour accorded recently French President Emmanuel Macron and previously to Barack Obama. The House of Lords will be sitting for at least part of the visit. Strikingly, the Commons rises on Sept 16, the day before the state visit begins. The timing may well have been dictated by Downing Street officials nervous over opposition to Trump within the Labour Party, including on its own backbenches and likely within the Cabinet itself. This is both an insult and a strategically stupid move at a time when the United States and the United Kingdom must collaborate on a range of issues, from strengthening Nato and advancing trade to ending Iran's nuclear programme. An address by President Trump to Parliament would help cement the most powerful bilateral partnership of modern times, while reinforcing the huge importance of the transatlantic alliance to both nations. I suspect that Sir Keir Starmer is terrified that some members of his own party would treat the Leader of the Free World disrespectfully at any address to Parliament. Labour MPs can be exceptionally rude and ill-mannered in the Commons, and any boorish behaviour would control. Disruptive scenes could be highly damaging to Starmer's own position as Labour leader, and might well raise serious questions over his ability to continue as PM. If Sir Keir cannot trust his own MPs to treat the US president with dignity and respect, it would be a damning indictment of his party and his own leadership. There is also the issue of deep-seated, nasty anti-Trump sentiment within Starmer's own Cabinet. You can imagine the howls of protest from the upper echelons of the Labour administration when the idea of a Trump speech to Parliament was discussed. This is the most Left-wing government in modern British history, and many within it are no doubt horrified by the prospect of an American president defending the idea of secure borders, national sovereignty, the deportation of illegal migrants, and the protection of freedom of speech at the very heart of Westminster. Senior members of the British Government have been highly critical of Trump, including Foreign Secretary David Lammy and Deputy Prime Minister Angela Rayner. Lammy labelled Trump a "racist KKK and Nazi sympathiser" in 2017. In 2020, Rayner attacked Trump's "voter suppression". Energy Secretary Ed Miliband called Trump a racist misogynist in 2016. Health Secretary Wes Streeting attacked Trump in 2017 as "an odious, sad, little man. Imagine being proud to Brussels, undermining the democratic will of 17.4 million Britons who voted to leave the European Union in 2016. Trump, meanwhile, is the biggest backer of Brexit during Trump's state visit on the world stage. His admirable Euroscepticism plays poorly with the increasingly Eurofederalist direction in which the Labour Party is moving. Trump is the most pro-British American president of the modern era. He adores the monarchy and the British people. He chose Brexit Britain for the first trade deal of his second term, and is giving the UK preferential treatment over the EU in avoiding heavier US tariffs. The denial of an address to Parliament will appear to many in Washington as both an act of pettiness and of rampant anti-Americanism within the ruling Labour Party today. Unlike Starmer, Trump is also a real leader, with a clear vision not only for advancing the security and prosperity of his own nation, but that of the entire free world. The contrast between the strength and seriousness of the Trump White House and the clownish amateurism of Starmer's Downing Street could not be greater. Perhaps that is also at the heart of the decision not to invite Trump to speak to Parliament. Starmer might fear being outclassed on his home turf by an American leader who is everything he is not, a president who projects resolve and determination, and who, refreshingly, actually stands up for his own people. Sir Keir should do the right thing and ensure that President Trump is issued an invitation to address Parliament, with the House of Commons recalled for the occasion. Trump's message is one that the British people deserve to hear, from a president who Labour Government inching cherishes Britain's great his-

The price of gold in the international market decreased by $3 to $3,397 from $3,400 whereas silver decreased $0.09 to $38.31 against $38.40, according to Association report.

FCA system boosts Karachi ports revenue

ISLAMABAD (APP): The a digital shift, it is a fiscal implementation of the Fac-success story," said eless Customs Assessment (FCA) system has yielded remarkable results as the total revenue collection at Karachi ports surged by 50% year-on-year, reaching Rs342.5 billion in July 2025, up from Rs227.9 billion in the same month last year.

According to documents, customs duty collections alone rose by 47%, from Rs63.6 billion in July 2024 to Rs93.8 billion in July 2025, signalling compliance, improved reduced under-invoicing, and greater transparency in the clearance process.

A senior Customs official told Wealth Pakistan that this sharp rise in revenue is due to key structur-FCA, which include extended operational hours, centralised assessments, virtual reviews, digitised examination protocols, and tighter

Customs Chief Collector Jamil Nasir Khan, who has been spearheading the appraisement and FCA reforms since late 2024. He said that the Central Appraisement Unit (CAU) as part of FCA regime in Karachi is now operational from 8:00 a.m. to midnight, enabling the daily clearance of 1,500 to 2,000 goods declarations (GDs). "Over 95% of GDs are assessed on the same day," Jamil Nasir Khan. The 50% growth in total revenue highlights not only increased efficiency and transparency but also a strong case for scaling up FCA nationwide. The dramatic rise contradicts early al reforms introduced under criticisms that the system could cause delays or revenue losses.

Further facilitation is expected with upcoming initiatives such as direct port congestion and ease liquidity constraints for importers.

It is worth mentioning that the launch of the FCA regime as part of the gov-ernment's Tax Transformation Plan is a significant reform that makes use of technology to maintain anonymity in the customs process to determine taxes on import shipments. The initiative was launched in December 2024 at the Karachi Port, which handles the bulk of imports before their transportation to the rest of the country.

The project involves relocating customs appraisement functions outside the customs collectorates. Under the initiative, a goods declaration or bill of entry submitted by an importer or their agent is randomly assigned to an assessing officer, who is physically located at a customs station, which is not the port port delivery and decou- of import in the automated "The results speak for pling of payment from GD system, for appraisal of themselves. #### Rodri will not make Manchester

City return LONDON (Agencies): Manchester City midfielder Rodri will not be at full fitness until after September's international break, Pep Guardiola has revealed. The 2024 Ballon d'Or winner missed most of last season due to ligament damage and without him City failed to a of mount strong defense their Premier League crown. The 29-yearold Spanish international fought his way back to fitness but suffered a groin injury in City's defeat to Saudi club Al-Hilal at the Club World Cup in the United States last month. "Rodri's getting better but he had a big injury in the last game against Al-Hilal and for the last five or six weeks," Guardiola said in comments released on Saturday. "He's training right now and in the last two or three days is better. Hopefully maybe the international break is when he will be really, really fit. "Hopefully, in the games (prior to that) he can play some minutes but the important thing is to not have pain because we don't want him to be come back injured, come back and injured. "We will try desperately to avoid that but he's training the last two or three days with us and that's good." The City staff are also nursing Phil Foden and Mateo Kovacic back to fitness and both players joined Rodri in being left out of a pre-season game in Sicily this week. through on goal and the substitute Ryan Hardie, another new face, forced Gavin Bazunu into an instinctive left-handed save on 87 minutes. In between those episodes Parkinson enjoyed an amusing back and forth with the home fans after Sam Smith's tug on Joshua Quarshie in the box went unpunished.

Cleworth, on a booking, was fortunate to avoid being penalised for handling a Shea Charles shot within two minutes of the restart. Those chances whirled in Parkinson's mind when the substitute Ryan Manning levelled, leathering a superb free-kick into the top corner from 25 yards. Manning was instrumental in the winner, too. He chested Charles's raking diagonal pass, teeing up Damion Downs. The US forward – also a summer signing fluffed his lines from a couple of yards out but the Southampton captain, Jack Stephens, was alive at the back post to apply the finish, the ball cannoning in off the underside of the bar.

For Stephens, it was a cathartic moment, an outpouring of emotion and a timely retort to his critics. At a fans' forum in the week, on the eve of a new era, the Southampton technical director, Johannes Spors, was forced to defend the decision to hand Stephens a fresh three-year contract. At the final whistle, Stephens kissed the captain's armband and seemingly did some soul-searching, staring deep into the stands.

Still said: "We know Stevo gets a fair bit of criticism – he's made mistakes and he probably knows that better than anyone – but he's a really good human being and deserves his goal."

Parkinson, meanwhile, stood deflated, hands on hips; chances to double their his opposite number perhaps put it best. "Welcome to the Championship," Still said.

SSP orders crackdown against wanted criminals

RAWALPINDI Senior Superintendent of Police (SSP) Investigation Raza Tanveer has directed police officers to intensify the crackdown on wanted criminals and ensure meritbased investigations in all heinous cases.

Chairing an online meeting with divisional Superintendents of Police Sub-Divisional Police Officers (SDPOs) Station House Officers (SHOs), the SSP reviewed the performance of the investigation teams and issued clear instructions to speed up progress on pending cases.

He emphasized that suspects involved in murder cases, as well as crimes against women and children, must be traced and arrested without delay.

He further ordered that investigations in such cases should be completed promptly, with challans submitted to courts within the stipulated time frame.

"The timely submission of challans is essential for delivering justice, and any negligence in this regard will not be tolerated," SSP Raza Tanveer warned, adding that officers failing to meet the set targets would face departmental action.

He instructed SPs and SDPOs to personally monitor investigations in all serious and important cases to ensure transparency, professionalism, and the highest standard of service delivery. "Merit must be the foundation of every investigation," he stressed, calling on officers to work with dedication and integrity to maintain public trust in the police. The SSP reiterated that effective supervision and a results-oriented approach were vital in combating crime.

Rain, flash floods predicated

KABUL (Pajhwok): Ministry of Transport and Civil Aviation (MoTCA) has predicated heavy rains and flash floods in 12 provinces of the country. In a statement, MoTCA said heavy rainfall and flash floods, thunder and lightning will likely lash Nuristan, Kunar, Nangarhar, Laghman, Kapisa, Panjsher, Parwan, Kabul, Maidan Wardak, Logar, Khost and Paktia provinces. The amount of rainfall in different places is expected to be between 10 and 30 millimeters, MoTCA added.

Vance and Lammy host Ukraine talks ahead of US-Russia summit

Vance and UK Foreign Secretary David Lammy are hosting a meeting of senior security officials near London to discuss the war in Ukraine.

Earlier on Saturday, UK Prime Minister Keir Starmer had a call with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelensky, and said they agreed it would be a "vital forum" to discuss progress towards peace. Zelensky has stressed he will make no territorial concessions to Russia ahead of a summit between US President Donald Trump and Russian President Vladimir Putin next week to discuss the future of the war.

Trump earlier signalled Ukraine may have to cede territory to end the war, which began with Russia's fullscale invasion in February 2022. Saturday's meeting is understood to be taking place at Chevening, Lammy's official country residence in Kent, where Vance and his family are currently staying, and to have been called at the request of the US.

Senior security officials from the US, Ukraine and Europe will take part. Trump and Putin are set to meet in Alaska on 15 August to discuss the future of the war in Ukraine.

Speaking on a potential deal to end the war, Trump said on Friday that there "will be some swapping of territories, to the betterment of both" "You're looking at territory that's been fought over for three and a half years, a lot of Russians have died. A lot of Ukrainians have died," the US president said. Russia has consistently insisted on Ukraine recognising Russian sovereignty over several Ukrainian regions, agreeing to demilitarisation and abandoning its Nato

Trump's position has also consistently involved Ukraine sacrificing land for peace. While Zelensky has been careful not to criticise Trump, his post on social media makes clear that he will not accept it. Kyiv rules out 'gifting land to occupier'

KYIV: President Volodymyr Zelenskyy has ruled out Ukraine ceding land to Russia and demanded his country take part in negotiations in comments made before planned talks between the leaders of Russia and the United States. In a video shared on social media on Saturday, Zelenskyy said Ukraine was ready for "real decisions" that could bring a "dignified peace" out stressed there could be no violation of the constitution on territorial ssues. "Ukrainians will not gift their land to the occupier," he said, warning that "decisions without Ukraine" would not bring peace.

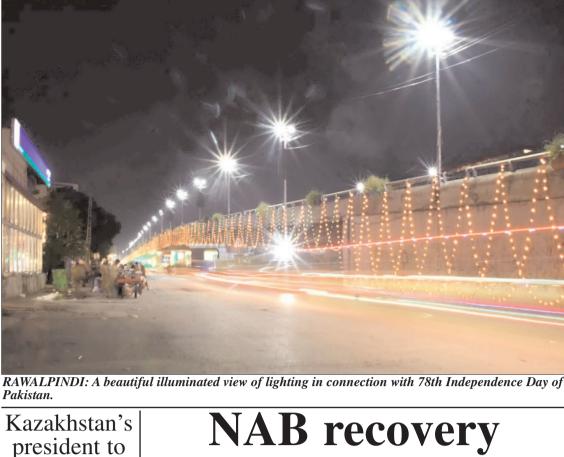

"They will not achieve anything. These are stillborn decisions. They are inworkable decisions. And we all need real and genuine peace. Peace that people will respect," added Zelenskyy, whose country has been fighting off full-scale Russian invasion since February 2022. His comments came hours after US President Donald Trump said a peace deal would involve 'some swapping of territories" as he announced a meeting on Friday with nis Russian counterpart, Vladimir Putin, in the US state of Alaska to discuss he war in Ukraine. Tens of thousands of people have been killed since Russia launched its invasion of Ukraine, which also forced millions of peoble to flee their homes. Three rounds of negotiations between Russia and Jkraine this year have failed to bear fruit, and it remains unclear whether a summit would bring peace any closer. On Thursday, Putin said he considers a meeting with Zelenskyy possible but the conditions for such negotiations must be right and the prerequisites for this are still far from being met. The Russian president did not outline his conditions, but previously, the Kremlin has insisted that Ukraine give up the territories Russia occupies, Western nations stop supplying Ukraine with weapons and they exclude Ukraine from membership in the NATO military alliance. "There has been a lot of peculation over what a ceasefire agreement could look like in which the ines of contact between Russia and Ukraine could be frozen for a number f years," Al Jazeera's Osama Bin Javad, reporting from Moscow, said. "It also not clear whether the Russian demand that NATO's ambitions in Jkraine should be forever quashed is actually going to be met.

Separately on Saturday, Zelenskyy spoke with British Prime Minister Keir Starmer and urged Ukraine's allies to take "clear steps" towards achieving a sustainable peace. Zelenskyy said he also shared the same view with Starmer on the danger of Russia's plan "to reduce everything to discussing the impossible". The Ukrainian president also spoke with his French counterpart, Emmanuel Macron. "I am grateful for the support. We exchanged views on the diplomatic situation," Zelenskyy said on social media, "it is truly important that the Russians do not succeed in deceiving myone again". For his part, Macron said he had also spoken to Starmer and German Chancellor Friedrich Merz and express the European countries' determination to support Ukraine. "Ukraine's future cannot be decided without the Ukrainians, who have been fighting for their freedom and security or over three years now," he said. "Europeans will also necessarily be part of the solution, as their own security is at stake." Meanwhile, national security advisers from Ukrainian allies - including the US, European Union nations and the UK - were gathering in Britain on Saturday to align their views ahead of the Putin-Trump summit. — Aljazeera essarily be part of the solution, as solution for peace. "We are ready, their own security is at stake". Trump's words on Russia may have hardened in recent months, but for Ukraine they have yet to be followed by tangible actions. On Friday, a spoke to expressed a strong desire for deadline set by the US president for Russia to agree to a ceasefire or face constant fighting and Russian drone more sanctions passed without any and missile attacks. But there is little apparent consequences.

bomb attack TOKYO (AFP): Twin cathedral bells will ring in unison in Nagasaki for the first time in 80 years, as the Japanese city commemorates the moment the United States decimated it with an atomic bomb eight decades ago. Crowds are set to gather at Nagasaki's Immaculate Conception Cathedral on Saturday morning, as the church's two bells will ring together for the first time since 1945. The US dropped an atomic bomb on the southwestern port city of Nagasaki on August 9, 1945, at 11:02am local time, three days after it dropped a nuclear weapon on Hiroshima.

About 74,000 people were killed in Nagasaki while 140,000 were killed in Hiroshima. On August 15, 1945, Japan surrendered, marking the end of World War II. The church Nagasaki, widely Urakami known as Cathedral, was rebuilt in 1959 after it was almost completely destroyed in the monstrous atomic explosion, the hypocentre of which was just a few hundred metres from the religious building. Only one of two church bells was recovered from the rubble. But, funded by Catholics in the US, a new second bell has been constructed and restored to the tower. It will chime on Saturday for the first time in 80 years at the exact moment the bomb was dropped.

Nearly 100 countries are set to attend this year's commemorations Nagasaki. Among the participants will be a representative from Russia, which has not been invited since its 2022 invasion of Ukraine. Israel, whose ambassador to Japan was not invited to the memorial last year over the country's war on Gaza, is also expected to attend.

'We wanted participants to come and witness directly the reality of the catastrophe that a nuclear weapon can cause," a Nagasaki offican cial said last week.
